SALMON IN ALASKA. Their Number Beyond the Bellef of Those Who Have Never Seen Them.

The number of salmon in these Alaskan streams, whether they empty into the Arctic or Behring Sea, or the Pacific Ocean, is simply beyond belief the Pacific Ocean, from the Saint Elias Alps, in a canoe, manned by a couple of Indians, the salmon were so plentiful that they formed a solid semi-circle in front of the canoe, with its bow as a center, and a radius of about twenty feet, and this semi-circle looked like the ripples of a small cascade, the protruding noses, backs and fins corresponding to the small stones that would project Khyens are settled in the mountains through such a waterfall. We had no salmon spear, but one of the Indians made one from a pole, cut from the bank, on the end of which he whittled a rude barb. This was too fragile, however, until the end was hardened by burning it in the fire, when it became much better, when a few salmon were secured, losing a dozen, nevertheless, to where one was captured by the extemporized spear. Wherever we ran the vast swarm against a shallow ripgreater part of this area is uncultivated ple, where it was hard for so many to get over in a hurry, great numbers of them would go scurrying past us on Hundreds of these fish were seen that had great ugly sears on them caused, my Indian guide said, by the spears of the numerous Indian fishermen who, at that season, were putting in their winter supply of salmon, and whose weapons were far from always being effective. We killed a number with a Winchester rifle from the shock by a shot on the water, directly over their heads, which never failed to turn them belly upward at once, and before they recovered they were safely landed in the canoe.
