PHYSICAL BEAUTY.

How Plain Faces Are Transformed Into Handsome Ones.

There are some men to be met with who frankly admit that their wives are ugly, and even here and there a wife who agrees that her husband's judgment is correct. But, as a rule, every man considers his own choice the best, and where there are fifty minds there will be fifty ideas of what constitutes physical beauty. We all know and admit that personal charm and mental accomplishments can transform a plain face into a handsome one, and the lack of them deprive a woman with the countenance of a Greek statue of the beauty which at first sight struck the eye. It is notorious that the women over whom men "play the fool" are often far from pretty. Not infrequently the belle of an Indian station is the Jevver see a house that had been lived ugliest girl within fifty miles, and the in at all that didn't have a few? board a ship on a long voyage flutter, myself is chock full of 'em. What I do is very often by no means the beauty of say, though, is, that there ain't no verhad lovers after she was seventy, does none. The reigning belle They ain't got no sense, nohow. — Texas is too often silly, or, overestimating the Siftings. fascinations of her face, does not take the trouble to be amiable. On the other hand, the plain woman, knowing that she is handicapped at the start, does her best to compensate for her illfavoredness by attractiveness of manner, and in the end generally wins in the race. John Wilkes, who was the ugliest man of his day, was in the habit of boasting that he would give the handsomest man in England half an hour's start of him and oust him early in the years of close association with the dear running. There is, in truth, no accounting for taste. Dr. Johnson always spoke of the painted and affected widow, old enough to be his mother, whom he married in the heyday of his youth as a "pretty creature," and even Joe Gargery, in one of the most delightful of Dicken's novels, was willing to believe that Pip's masculine sister was "a fine figure of a woman."-Boston

Mr. Beecher's Estate.

Henry Ward Beecher left a comparatively small fortune. He had an estate in the Peekskill which cost himabout $150,000. He had insurance policies which footed up something like $20,000 or $25,000, and in hot haste his heirs sold his pictures and books and all personal belongings endeared to his friends, at all events by many, many old man, and now how does it stand? The $150,000 place at Peekskill has literally gone to seed. Those magnificent flower-beds, on which the old man eloquent spent years of thought, fortunes of experience and thousands of dollars earned by the sweat of his imperial brow, are choked with weeds and overrun with grasses. Already the market price of the place has fallen to $85,000, and I understand—in fact, I have seen it stated in print-that an offer of $65,000, which was refused, will, in all probability never be made again. SUGAR FROM BEETS.

One of the Most Prosperous and Extensive of German Industries. The beet-sugar industry in Germany has grown to large proportions in the duced in Hanover in 1864, and sugar is now produced in all the southern portion of Hanover, the larger part of Brunswick, the Prussian part of Saxony, and also in a part of the kingdom of Saxony. Perhaps two-thirds of all the German beet sugar is raised in these localities. It requires very fertile ground to raise the sugar beet, and bone dust, phosphates, Chilian saltpeter and composts are freely used. The plant is exceedingly exhausting to the soil, and farmers, to preserve their ground, observe strictly the rule of rotation in crops, only planting a field ta beets once in seven years, as a rule. The planting is done in May The ground is thoroughly prepared beforehand. It is plowed twice in the All preceding, the first plowing being to the depth of 4 inches, the second 16 or 18 inches. Then just before planting it is harrowed and rolled until it is as smooth and hard as a floor. The seed is drilled in rows 1 foot apart. When the young plants are about 3 inches high they are thinned out, leaving three or four in a hill, I foot apart, and these are subsequently reduced to one in a hill. The cultivation is done mostly by plow, the crop being plowed about four times in a season, both lengthwise and across the rows. The vomen and children, meantime, are constantly going over the field keeping out the weeds by hand. The gathering season extends from September 15 to February 15. Men go ahead with ong spades and loosen each hill, the women and children following, who lift the roots out of the ground pile them together. After and the tops are * removed they are either taken directly to the community factory or covered deeply with earth to preserve them. The factory system is a very interesting part of the business. Factories are established in each neighborhood. In all the successful ones capitalists are rigidly excluded, and only farmers may hold shares. Each farmer must, for each share he holds, cultivate from three to five acres in beets. The average product is 17,000 or 18,000 pounds per acre, for which the farmer gets about 90 pfennig per 100. He is guaranteed a sure market for his crop at a fixed price, and gets a dividend out of the profits at the end of the season. The pulp of the beets, after the sugar is taken out, makes a first-class food for cattle, and this the farmer gets also at a fixed price. The cultivation is subject to inspection by the factory, and each inspector must be not only a firstclass farmer, but a chemist. He must live close to the factory, and gets a good salary, besides a per cent. of the profits. Most of the sugar goes to refineries at the large cities. At each factory is also a government inspector. who examines each lot and fixes the tax. Each wagon-load of beets is sampled by a chemist, and if they fall below a certain grading as to percentage of sugar, they are rejected. This is to prevent the use of inferior composts, which would make large beets with little sugar in them. One nice feature about the business is that on all the sugar which is exported the government returns to the farmer an amount which is more than equivalent to the tax. This results in a very large portion of the crop being exported.

SMALL INDUSTRIES.

The Insignificant Shops in Which the Fa-mous Sheffleld Cutlery Is Made. The Sheffield cutlery-one of the glories of England-is not made by machinery; it is chiefly made by hand. There are at Sheffield a few firms which manufacture cutlery right through from the making of steel to the finishing of tools, and employ wage-workers, and yet even these firms -I am told by my friend, E. Carpenter, who kindly gathered for me information about the Sheffield trade-let out some part of the work to the "small masters." But by far the greatest number of the cutlers work in their homes, with their relatives, or in small work-shops supplied with wheel power. which they rent for a few shillings a week. Immense yards are covered with buildings, which are sub-divided into series of small work shops. Some of them cover only a few square yards. and there I saw smiths hammering, all the day long, blades of knives on a small anvil, close by the blaze of their fires. Occasionally the smith may have one help or two. In the upper stories scores of small workshops are supplied with wheel power, and in each of them three, four, or five workers and a "master" fabricate, with the occasional aid of a few plain machines, every description of toolsfiles, saws, blades of knives, razors, and so on. Grinding and glazing are done in other small work-shops, and even steel is cast in a small foundry, the working staff of which consists only of five or six men. When walking through these work-shops I easily imagined myself in a Russian cutlery village, like Pavlovo or Vorsma. The Sheffield cutlery has thus maintained its olden organization, and the fact is the more remarkable as the earnings of the cutlers are very low as a rule; but, even when reduced to a few shillings a week, the cutler prefers to vegetate on his small earnings than to go as a waged laborer in a "house." The spirit of the old trade organizations, which were so much spoken of five-and-twenty years ago, is thus still alive. - Prince Krotapkin, in Nineteenth Century.

Shocking Accident.

Shocking Accident.

So read the headlines of many a newspaper column, and we peruse with palpitating interest the details of the catastrophy, and are deeply impressed by the sacrafice of human lives involved. Yet thousands of men and women are falling victims every year to that terrible disease, consumption (scrofula of the lungs), and they and their friends are satisfied to believe the malady incurable. Now, there could be no greater mistake. No earthly power, of course, can restore a lung that is entirely wasted, but Dr. Plerce's Golden Medical Discovery will rapidly and surely arrest the ravages of consumption, if taken in time. Do not, therefore, despair, until you have tried this wonderful remedy.
