

THE TELEPHONE-REGISTER.

McMinnville, Oregon: March 15, 1889.

WANAMAKER AND THE CABINET.

How the Money to Defeat the Democrats Was Raised.

A republican politician who will have much to do with President Harrison's administration said recently: "Mr. Wanamaker is not going to give you or any other newspaper correspondent an interview. He isn't the sort of man that hankers after notoriety, but he talked to me pretty freely the other day, supposing me to be a safe person, and it is such a simple, straightforward story that I should rather like to have you publish it provided you don't use my name and you begin by saying that Mr. Wanamaker hadn't the least idea he was going to be reported. It came from my thinking him, as every good republican should, for the part he took in the late election.

"I don't deserve any thanks for what I did," he said. "It was just one of the things that came to me to be done. When Quay sent for me I was surprised. I had no more idea what he wanted with me than you might have had if he telegraphed for you. But I knew he was not the kind of a man to send for me unless he had important business with me, so I went. Then he told me that the National Republican committee needed money and his scheme for raising it. I at first declined to have anything to do with it. I had very little hope of defeating Cleveland, and still less Mrs. Cleveland, who is justly popular with the whole country, and whom I admire greatly myself, and I didn't want to get in a sinking ship. He urged the matter, told me why he felt sure of carrying the election if he had money.

"Even then I hesitated, and asked three weeks for consideration. He urged, and I talked with our leading manufacturers, men whose names are the best in the land, such men as Washburne and Amos Lawrence's grandson, and a dozen others I could name, men who would never have given $1 for dishonest uses, even if I had been willing to ask it, and at the end of the three weeks I told Quay I would undertake to raise the money if he would allow us to establish a Manufacturer's bureau and have a voice in the disposition of the money. I didn't mean that we insisted on knowing what was done with every dollar of it. I didn't want to know. When I sell a suit of clothes I don't insist upon being told just where those clothes are going. My responsibility ceases when I furnish a good article at a fair price. What I did insist upon was that I should be able to satisfy the men who trusted me with their money that it was used for the purpose for which they subscribed it, and that guarantee Mr. Quay gave me. That is how there came to be a Manufacturer's bureau.

"Now people are saying that I am to be paid for my services with a seat in the cabinet, as if I want pay for doing my duty, or as if I would buy office. They say that was why I went to see Mr. Harrison. I went because Mr. Harrison sent for me and I thought it only proper to go. But for that I should have sailed for Europe on Saturday to join my family. Personally, I would much rather have gone to see Mrs. Wanamaker. Now reporters are lying in wait for me all the time. I haven't anything to tell them, though I can't convince them of it. Mr. Harrison didn't tell me what he was going to do and I didn't ask him. He isn't the kind of a man to talk about what he means to do."—St. Louis Republic.

Didn't Want to be Endorsed.

Several years ago there lived in Medford, Massachusetts, two old friends, Sam Parker, cashier of a Boston bank, and Sam Train, leather dealer, both wealthy men. Train was deacon of the Orthodox church, and Parker was a Unitarian. During a great revival Deacon Train urged his friend Parker to accompany him to an enquiry meeting, and seated him in a seat beside himself. The deacon in a fervid, solemn manner related his experience; he told what a sinner he had been; that he was but a worm of the dust and not fit to live among his fellow men, and it was of the Lord's mercy that he was not consumed. After he had finished he called upon his friend Parker to tell his experience. Parker rose and in an impressive manner said: "My friends, I have not much to tell about myself. I dislike to boast of my sins or my virtues, but I have been acquainted with Deacon Train for many years, and can fully endorse every word he has said about himself. He has told the truth." This hearty endorsement was so unexpected to the deacon that he lost control of his temper and wanted to fight. He upbraided Parker for perjury. "How could I do otherwise?" said Parker; "I did not want to make you out a liar by saying we must not believe you as bad as you say you are. I preferred to back you up as a man of truth." A coolness sprang up between the families of the two old friends, and the deacon never invited the cashier to another inquiry meeting.

Taken collectively the cabinet presents a fair average of ability, and probably represents the spirit and tendencies of the republican party.—Alta California.
