DOES PROTECTION PROTECT?

The governor of Indiana has recently issued a proclamation asking that food and clothing be sent by the charitable to the pauper coal miners of Clay county, in his state, who to the number of many hundreds are starving.

We do not wish to say that these men would be in any better condition under tariff reform, for we don't know that they would be. We only know that they could not be in any worse condition, and we will not be so partisan as to declare that it is the result of protection, for we don't know that it is.

In a matter that concerns the bread, butter and shelter of others, and especially of wage-workers, there is room for conscience and care in discussion. We despise those who in any way make a man's bread and butter depend upon what ticket he votes, to what church he belongs, or to what secret union he swears allegiance.

These Clay county miners were warned last year that if they voted a certain ticket they would be starved lean, if a certain other, they would be fed fat. Naturally they voted the fat ticket, and they did it under the highest advice and upon promises made under the most public and binding of conditions.

If our readers will get a file of the Indianapolis Journal of July 27, 1888, a paper then edited by Mr. Elijah Halford, an English gentleman who is now private secretary of the president of the United States, they will find reported these events which we epitomize.

On the day before—to wit, the 26th of July—an excursion of Clay county coal miners arrived in Indianapolis. A brass band was furnished to them, and they paraded the fine streets of that city under banners inscribed: "Give us Harrison and Protection," "Protection and Plenty," "Free Trade and Starvation," "The Lamp of Experience Guides Our Feet," "Protection is Good Enough for Us." They were taken to General Harrison's house and introduced by Colonel Carter in a speech, in which he said:

The visit is made for the purpose of attending our devotion to the great principle of a protective tariff. These men want such a policy adopted as will enrich us rather than that other policy which tends to the pauperism and destitution of our people. IN SHORT, THEY WANT HIGH WAGES, PLENTY OF WORK AND PLENTY OF GOOD BREAD AND BUTTER. They believe that you, sir, are the typical representative of the great principles underlying the platform of the republican party, such as high wages for our workmen—etc.

Another speaker said: This is a square-toed fight. On one side bread, beef, butter and the good things of this life, and on the other side them; on the other side, UNCLE GEORGE, low wages and such grub as you can get, and be satisfied with half a loaf.

With this ample notice of the expectations of the crowd of wage-workers who stood before him, General Harrison then spoke, saying: It is not clear that that policy which secures the largest amount of work to be done at home is the policy which will secure to laboring men steady employment and the best of wages? What, after all, is the best evidence of a nation's prosperity and the best guarantee of social order if it is not an intelligent, thrifty contented working class? Can we look for contentment if the workman is unable to supply his daily toil, but is not able in the vigor of youth to lay up a store against old age? A condition of things that compels the laborer to contemplate want as an incident of sickness or disability is one that tends to social disorder.

Mr. Halford's paper spoke of the occasion as "a magnificent demonstration from men whom protection will benefit. The coal miners are more directly interested in the operations of the tariff than any that have heretofore visited the city.

It was a great day for the Clay county miners and they went home filled with visions of Harrison and "bread and butter and beef," confident that they had a promise of plenty, against which they could draw as confidently as against a deposit in the bank. Read it all over and consider the effect of such an appeal to men with wives and babies at home dependent on their wages for their daily bread.

Think of the fair hopes which rose before them, the sense of pride in the power of the ballot which was theirs, and the tenderness and strength compact in the certainty that they could dictate their own fortunes and shelter and protect their dependents by use of the ballot alone. That was a year ago. Colonel Carter has a well-salaried office, General Harrison is president and Mr. Halford is secretary, with the privilege of paying out traveling money for civility to traveling members of his family. But there are no processions of Clay county miners in the streets of Indianapolis. No brass band tickles the ear and no gaily-painted banners flaunt in the air. The miners voted the fat ticket, but in leanness and sorrow, hunger and misery, they draw in vain upon the promises made that Harrison meant bread and beef and butter. We make no debate about the effect upon labor of rival systems of political economy. We know that no theories can stand against the facts which in good time cross them all. But it is a moral, not an economical, question. The governor of Indiana asks charity for these men who only a year ago stepped high and proudly behind music to see the man whose election they were told meant, without doubt or qualification, high wages, steady work and bread and butter. They are squalling and starving. Infants are pale and scrawny as they pull at the famined fountain of maternity, and upon them all is the shameful necessity of begging bread.

We appeal to the bishops and the other clergy for judgment upon the morality of deceiving these men by promises which secured their votes, and then leaving them to shame and want.

We know the answer. It is made already in Indiana, where many a cheek has been made to blush with hot shame by these facts. The answer is, that protection has nothing to do with the condition of these men. Ah! then the tales told them that summer day were lies, and the lies influenced votes, and yet there are the Commandments.

THE CENSUS. The census of 1870 was taken by the United States marshals under the direction of a superintendent, who worked under the secretary of the interior. As the marshals were employees of the department of justice, the confusion was very great. The act of 1870, which governed the census taking of 1880, and will with a few modifications apply to that of 1890 was properly the work of James A. Garfield, Representative Cox, General Francis A. Walker and Eugene Hale. It provides for the centering of the work at Washington and the enumeration by persons who are solely appointed, except the supervisors, by the superintendent of the census.

The house to house count will commence on the first Monday of next June, and will involve inquiries as to age, sex, nativity, race, physical condition, and a dozen other things. Forty thousand enumerators will be in the 175 census districts and for each district the president will in February appoint a supervisor, who will receive $125 per month and in addition thereof $1.00 for every 1,000 of the population in thickly settled districts and $1.40 in others. The enumerators will be paid two cents for every inhabitant, birth and death reported; twenty cents for each farm and thirty cents for each factory recorded, and for every veteran of the late war five cents. In addition to these out door employees there are many special agencies which are very cozy places for the friends of statesmen, involving little labor and no expenditure of ideas, the duties being merely to go to manufacturing establishments in cities and ask pointed questions and put down the answer.

The amount of information obtained in our census are amazing. Every field is covered. Great Britain sends a policeman around in the evening to each house with a printed slip asking information and in the morning he carries it away, and the thing is done. But in this country census taking is invoicing everything on hand. The work of the tenth census was embraced in twenty-two volumes, and some of those were not issued until 1887. The work bids fair to last forever. There was even a volume devoted to forest trees, and two volumes of log winded essays on social subjects. It was a dumping place for waste information. The new census will attempt to be less ambitious, though the projectors of the census of 1880 made the same promise.

OREGON'S MINISTER. Although it seems strange to an American that foreigners should receive recognition for political process before the people to whom recognition is naturally due, they must submit to the inevitable with a good grace. The appointment of Mr. Sol Hirsch of this state as direct influence exerted by the foreign element in American politics. He was a leader and he must be rewarded in the end. He now has the reward asked for and the common people must be content for they have nothing to do with such things. He is a man of ability at least in some lines or he never would have worked for and received the appointment. This demonstrates his ability. He is from Oregon and with some people geography has considerable to do with their opinion of a man. Mr. Hirsch will no doubt be called upon to perform some important duties for the government while holding the position as United States minister to Turkey and his ability as a diplomat will not be established in the minds of the people of Oregon until he performs those duties well.

Civil service reform has reached its limit under this administration. Relatives both near and distant are being taken care of, and people who perform personal favors are now to receive government offices. President Harrison awarded an office to a detective spy named Furlong who had rendered him a personal service. Mrs. Harrison's whims must be put up with also, for the governor of California, at the instance of Mrs. Harrison, has pardoned a convicted and lifelong criminal. During the late campaign this criminal wrote a humorous campaign song of great merit. He has received his reward.

The Medical profession has more bigoted asses than any other profession under the sun. Since the days of Harvey, the discoverer of the circulation of the blood, medical ideas have enlarged, but every innovation has been met by a storm of abuse from a majority of the practitioners at the time of the new idea. Jenner when he stated that he had found a preventative for smallpox, was almost murdered, and later the claim of Brown-Sequard as the discoverer of a powerful stimulant which will rejuvenate a person and make a young person out of an old one for a while, has brought forth the same abuse from a profession whose ideas should all tend toward future and present improvement, but which seems to be in the same old rut. They would not wait for an investigation of the merits of the stimulant but attacked at once the idea and declared it preposterous. Several better minded men of the profession, notably Dr. Hammond, of Washington, have experimented and find that the stimulant possesses all the merit claimed for it by Dr. Brown-Sequard. The stimulant is prepared by taking certain glands of a healthy male brute of any kind and pounding them in a mortar, adding a little water and blood of the animal, and the liquid after perfect filtration is the stimulant which is injected hypodermically.

According to the Oregonian "The attempt in the name of science to patch up the superannuated laborer who has lived 'until his flame lacks oil' by infusing into his sluggish veins the flesh blood of a lamb is cruel both to the subject and the victim." The "superannuated laborer" according to Oregonian doctrine should be disposed of. In other words the laborer is of no account to this world only as a motive force, when this force is gone and the poor man lies on a sick bed, brought there by honest toil, the Oregonian says it is cruel to inject into him the life principle of a lamb. This was mentioned in connection with the condemnation of the Brown-Sequard stimulant which has created such a stir in the medical world lately. The Oregonian like the bigoted members of the medical fraternity who have attacked every improvement for ages, opens up with a trade of which the above quotation is a part.

Little Emperor Bill, of Germany, has taken it into his head that he wants to know all about naval affairs. He condescended to appear in England at the naval review and was given the epaulets of an admiral of the British fleet. This is a stroke of policy by the wily old queen of England. A few months ago the little emperor was cursing the English blood in his veins.

Sungist Cox, after visiting the Pacific coast, says of the people here: "They are," he said, "as if you had taken the cream of New York, of Washington, of Buffalo, of all the cities of the East—the brightest boys of the family—and sent them out. With plenty of wit, plenty of enterprise, and their pockets full of money, they are the brightest people in the world.
