On the whole, it must be said—from a purely non-partisan standpoint, intent only upon the welfare of the whole country—that it is not worth the senator while to amend its rules in order to pass Speaker Reed's harmful bill. The most patriotic thing which it can do is to let the bill die. If the senate feels that it must aid the south let it take the form of school-houses instead of election officers and perhaps bayonets. As matters now stand the south is making marvelous progress. Outside interference of any sort is more likely to do harm than good.—Chicago News.—Int.

A curious instance of the author of "Looking Backward" declining to look backward and persisting in looking forward occurred at the dedication of the monument to Dr. Joseph Bellamy, the great-grandfather of the author. In reply to an invitation to be present, Edward Bellamy wrote from a watering place: "I have been compelled to come down here for my health and shall have to leave my great-grandfather in the lurch as regards attendance upon his Fourth of July celebration. I greatly regret that I seem lacking in family loyalty and hope you will believe me that I am not so, but in the present shaky condition of my health I cannot but feel that my first duty is to my posterity, a boy of five and a girl of four, rather than to my ancestry. It is bad to be an unfruitful great grandson, but worse still to be a reckless parent."

There are only 4 photographs in England and three of these were placed in Westminster Abbey upon the occasion of Stanley's marriage. One of them was placed in the tower to record the full sound of the wedding bells, another beside the organ to catch the music, and the third in the choir. These last are included in the list of bridal presents of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley, so that the sweet sounds that accompanied their entrance into the realm of matrimony may be repeated to them. The suggestion was most unique and disproves the suggestion that there is nothing new under the sun. In fact the Stanley bridal presents contain more than one contradiction of the truth of this idea. A geographical watch, the first ever manufactured, which tells the exact time in almost all the principal cities in the world, is another example, while even the bridal cake taxed ingenuity successfully in devising something new for the occasion.

The Pittsburg Leader, a republican paper says editorially: "It is curious how fate deals with men. The telegraphic dispatches announce that Stephenson Archer, the late treasurer of the state democratic committee, who embezzled $130,000 from funds under his control, has been convicted and sentenced to five years in the penitentiary. With an embezzling treasurer of her sister state and nearest neighbor in a felon's cell, how must Pennsylvania blush when she reflects that one of her ex-treasurers is accused, without denial, of stealing from her funds double the amount, and instead of being in the penitentiary or having proven the charges unfounded, is at the head of the republican party of the nation, and has the efrontery to say to her: "Here is my candidate for the highest executive office in your government. Make Delmator governor or suffer my displeasure." Maryland is a southern democratic state, but she honors herself by calling a thief a thief, while Pennsylvania, a northern state and the wheel-horse of the G.O. P., elevates her accused ex-state treasurer to the position of a slave-driver, puts a whip in his hand and crouches submissive to his will.

COAST PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS. With a population of 350,000 Washington will be entitled to two representatives in congress under any apportionment that may be adopted. The population of the state will probably exceed a million before the next census, but it will have to be satisfied with its two members for ten years. It is possible now to estimate the strength of the Pacific coast in the electoral college at the coming presidential election. It will hardly vary from this figure: California..... 9 Oregon..... 4 Washington..... 4 Nevada..... 3 Montana..... 3 Idaho..... 2 Total..... 26 Should Arizona and New Mexico be admitted six more votes would thus be added.

BLAINE'S NEW IDEA.

Blaine is a wily politician, and in engineering the pan-American congress his eyes were not closed to the best policy to be pursued by the United States. Of course he did not go as far in the advocacy of this policy as do the democrats, but he is not backward in opposing the McKinley bill. He is looked upon as a candidate in 1892, and therefore his utterances against the policy of the Harrison administration are noted with considerable interest. As the following shows: Mr. Blaine is without a shadow of a doubt right when he contends that with a little judicious management in the way of reciprocity the trade of the countries to the south of us can be had. The good feeling engendered by the Pan-American congress ought to be taken advantage of. No one is more capable of speaking upon this subject than the promoter of the gathering and the senate with the opportunity before it, will seriously hinder if it does not make provisions for carrying out Mr. Blaine's views.—Philadelphia Inquirer. Mr. Blaine's letter on the tariff, in which he suggests an opportunity for opening the markets of forty million of people to the products of American farmers is of vast public importance and will command great attention. It is brief and to the point.—Cincinnati Commercial. Mr. Blaine, it is plain seen that the McKinleyites have gone too far, and that only disaster, both to his party and to the country, waits upon the enactment of their bill. He sees that the home market delusion has had its day, and that the only salvation for American industries is an extension of foreign markets. He therefore takes occasion to publicly repudiate this policy and call a halt upon the mad career of the protection fanatics. In so doing he makes himself for the moment, once more the central figure on the stage of public affairs.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

Will the federal election bill pass the senate? That's the question that everybody is asking now. A week ago nine-tenths of the shrewdest observers of congressional doings would have said no; but things have changed, and now those who value their prestige as legislative prophets say "wait until the middle of the week; let me see what next the republican caucus will do." What has brought about this change? Several things. In the first place the democrats "hollered" before they got out of the woods about how they were going to "down" the majority if they attempted to take up the bill. In the next place the political wires have been working pretty lively and a great deal of pressure has been brought to bear upon senators who did not favor the election bill. One of the sharpest of these moves has taken place right here in Washington where the Virginia state republican committee met and issued an address stating that they would put up no state ticket this year because the elections in that state are unfair under the state laws. "Bosh!" you say. Well, it may, or it may not be, just according to the way you look at it; but that it is politics is not for a moment to be doubted. All the preliminary signs of a red hot political fight in congress are now visible. Senators who never stay here during the warm weather are daily in their seats or within calling distance, and it looks as though the republican leaders thought the fight might extend to the house, for Representative Anderson, of Kansas has offered a resolution revoking all leaves of absence, except for sickness, after to-morrow. The democrats have made Senator Gorman their commander-in-chief and the senators in caucus assembled have promised to obey his orders without a word. Senator Edmunds is the general on the republican side, although the staying qualities of Senator Ingals, who is a much younger man, may put him in the lead when the fight opens. The preliminary skirmish is now going on among the republicans over the question of changing the senate rules so as to cut off debate at the pleasure of the majority. If this is done the election bill will be passed; if it is not done it will not be possible for the republicans to pass it, even though unanimous in its favor; simply because the democrats would talk out the rest of the fifty-first congress.

The republicans succeeded in having the conference report on the silver bill passed by the senate and house, and the bill is now in the hands of the president. Evidently the bill does not satisfy Senator Teller, for he has introduced a joint resolution instructing the president to inform the Latin American governments and any others that he may deem it expedient, that the United States has determined to use both gold and silver as full legal tender money, and also to invite them to join the United States in a conference to adopt a common ratio between gold and silver. Gen. Schofield is in luck, the house military committee having made a favorable report on the bill to revive the position of Lieutenant General of the army. Chairman Belden of the Republican Congressional committee, has probably realized by this time that he has made a mistake in making his appeal to republican editors in behalf of the Federal election bill. Manufactured sentiment never helps any cause. Wyoming can at last read her title clear among the states, Mr. Harrison having signed the bill last Thursday night. Gen. Nettleton of Minnesota, is to be the new assistant secretary of treasury, just created by the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill. Mr. Harrison's silence on the Federal election bill is worrying some of the republican party leaders. It is particularly noticeable because he has not heretofore hesitated about making his wish, as known in relation to legislation. Can it be that he is opposed to the bill? Stranger things have happened. A joint resolution has been introduced in the house, providing for the adjournment of congress on July 31. This means nothing, as it was introduced without authority of the committee on rules. The senate has passed the two shipping bills and taken up the tariff bill, which will have the right of way as the "unfinished business" of that body.

JOHN CHARLES FREEMONT.

General John Charles Fremont, familiarly known as the "Pathfinder," died in his home in Washington city, Sunday June 12, after a short illness. General Fremont was born in Savannah, Georgia, January 21, 1813, being in his 78th year at the time of his death. His father, who was a Frenchman, settled in Norfolk, Virginia married Anne Beverly Whiting a Virginia lady, and supported himself by teaching his native language. After his death, which took place in 1818, his widow removed with her three infant children to Charleston, where John Charles entered the junior class of Charleston college in 1828, and for some time stood high especially in mathematics; but his inattention and frequent absences at length caused his expulsion. He then employed himself as a private teacher of mathematics. He afterward became teacher of mathematics on the sloop of war Natchez, 1838, and after a cruise of two years returned, and was given his degree by the college which had expelled him. On the 7th of July, 1848, while engaged with Jean Nicholas Nicollet in exploring under government authority, the country between the Missouri and the Northern frontier, he was commissioned by President Van Buren as second lieutenant of topographical engineers. He went to Washington in 1840 to prepare his report, and while there met Jessie, daughter of Thomas H. Benton, then senator from Missouri, and an engagement followed, but as the lady was only fifteen years of age, her parents objected to the match; and suddenly the influence of Colonel Benton, received from the War Department orders to make an examination of the Des Moines on the western frontier. The survey was made rapidly, and shortly after his return from this duty, the lovers were secretly married, October 19, 1841. In 1842 Fremont was instructed by the department to take charge of the expedition for the exploration of the Rocky mountains, particularly of the South pass. He left Washington on May 2, and in just four months he had carefully examined the south pass and explored Wind river mountains, ascending their highest point, since known as Fremont's peak, 13,570 feet high. In the next year Fremont determined to explore the then unknown region between the Rocky mountains and the Pacific, and set out in May, 1843, with thirty-nine men. On September 6, after traveling over 1700 miles, he came in sight of the great Salt lake. His investigations corrected many vague and erroneous ideas about this region, of which no accurate account had ever been given, and great influence in promoting the settlement of Utah and the Pacific States, including this great section. It was the report of this expedition that gave to the Mormons their first idea of Utah as a place of residence. After leaving Salt Lake he explored the upper tributaries of the Columbia, descended the valleys of the great river to Fort Vancouver, and on the 10th of November set out on his return. From this time to 1855 he was engaged in explorations under the government, and during the year last named he took up his residence in New York City. He now began to be mentioned as an anti-slavery candidate for the presidency. In the first national republican convention, which met in Philadelphia, on June 17, 1856, he received 356 votes to John McClean, on an informal ballot, and on the first formal ballot Fremont was unanimously nominated. In his letter of acceptance he expressed himself strongly against the extension of slavery and in favor of free labor. A few days after the republican convention adjourned a national American convention at New York also nominated him for the presidency. After a spirited and exciting contest the presidential choice fell upon Buchanan, he receiving 174 electoral votes from nineteen states, while Fremont received 114 votes from eleven states. The popular vote for Fremont was 1,341,000 and for Buchanan 1,838,000; for Fillmore 874,000. Soon after the beginning of the civil war he was made major-general of the regular army and assigned to the command of the newly created Western department, serving faithfully and well.

On May 31, 1864, a convention of republicans, disassociated with Mr. Lincoln, met at Cleveland and tendered Fremont a nomination for president, which he accepted. In the following September a committee of republicans waited upon him and urged his withdrawal as "vital to the success of the party." After considering the matter a week, he acceded to their request, saying in his letter of withdrawal that he did so "not to aid in the election of Mr. Lincoln, but to do my part toward preventing the election of the democratic candidate." Since 1864 the general has taken little part in public affairs, but has been prominent in railroad matters. In 1878 to '81 he was governor of Arizona. His wife, Jessie Benton, who survives him, was born in Virginia in 1824.

BANKRUPTCY AHEAD.

There is no one in congress who is more familiar with treasury questions than Mr. Carlisle, and what he says of our prospective financial condition ought to be taken very seriously by all who desire to consider on the broad plane of statesmanship. Mr. Carlisle says that the regular and permanent appropriations for the year will amount to $469,000,000. If to this are added the amounts which, on a low estimate, will be paid for sugar bounties and for subsidies, the expenditures will reach $463,000,000, or $43,000,000 more than Mr. Windom's estimate of the governments receipts. In other words the federal Government, on the showing of the secretary of the treasury, is already bankrupt, without counting the river and harbor bill, which is prospective, or the enormously increased liabilities for pensions in addition to the sinking fund to be accounted for. Instead of reducing revenues the Republican leaders ought to be engaged in the congenial task of increasing them in order to meet their extravagant expenditures.

CENSUS RETURNS.

The Eugene Guard says by the courtesy of Mrs. T. M. Jackson, we are enabled to give the population of some of principal towns of Western Oregon. In making their returns from a number of the towns the enumerators did not separate the inhabitants of the towns from the precinct of which they are a part. It is to be regretted that this was not done so that an accurate count could be made of the towns. The precincts in almost every instance extend several miles into the country, and the count cannot be depended upon to give the populations of the towns proper. The following is the count: WITHIN THE INCORPORATION. Eugene.....3,017 Ashland.....1,779 McMinnville.....1,385 WITHIN THE PRECINCTS. Salem.....7,231 Albany.....6,872 Oregon City.....3,185 Roseburg.....2,351 Grant's Pass.....2,193 Corvallis.....2,123 Hillsboro.....1,545 Jacksonville.....1,197

In the above list Eugene, Ashland and McMinnville are the only towns that give the city alone. The others are county and town mixed. North Eugene precinct inside the city limits, 1523; South Eugene 1494. Eighth street is the dividing line.
