WHICH ARE BEST LIKED?
ARE MEN MOST ATTRACTED BY DEMONSTRATIVE WOMEN?

Old Time Young Ladies and the Girl of the Period—My friends and Mr. Fritts' daughter—the girl that is to offer herself if Missie is right.

[Copyright, 1891, by American Press Association.]
I was extremely amused one day, when sitting with a mother and daughter whom I rank among my dear friends, at a little bit of cynicism that came from the fresh young lips of the girl. Her mother, whose ideas and practice are largely based upon the innocency of Eden, was reproving her daughter for having been, as she fancied, a little too forward in accepting a young man's attentions and an invitation to ride with him, and finally, with a tremendous assumption of worldly wisdom, she said: "It is a great mistake girls are making nowadays in being so accessible. Men don't value them half so much, or try half so hard to please them, for they see that they can please without their consent. Why should they trouble themselves? If a girl is cold and reserved and draws back, the men will be picked into pursuit and exertion."

"Bravo, little mamma!" cried the saucy daughter, clapping her hands and glancing at me, while I am ashamed to say, I joined in her admiration. "You have at last asserted your position as the 'cool parent' and administered the crushing rebuke to your rebellious child! Bread and water, a locked cell, and perhaps salutary chastisement must soon follow unless I reform. But, darling little mother, who is to be the person to exact all that worldly wisdom the world has moved on, and now across change tout cela?"

"Who's 'most'?" interrupted my friend. "The woman please men years hence. Or if I sacrifice the present taste to the future necessity, how can I tell what sort of woman I shall prefer in ten years? It is really a most harassing question."

"I don't see how you can settle it except by going to Utah," said I, sympathetically. "True, I have considered the subject most seriously, but there are certain lines of dress goods are in New York this year. In the first place there is the old Henrietta, which can be bought in all the fashionable colors at about fifty cents a yard, forty-four inches wide, serges, in stripes and plain, and from forty-five to sixty-five cents, homespun, from thirty cents up; shepherd checks and light weight chevrot, from fifty cents, and a plainer quality, which is seen, white, black and colored. Some of the white is made up their skirts and collars, and the effect is delicately beautiful. The black is made up over scarlet or yellow or some other color with excellent taste. For those of a cruder fancy silk and satin are made up under the black grenadines. Russian net will be worn to some extent, and so will the Spanish and Chantilly flouncings, but the real fin de siècle is grenadine or beige."

Chap Dress Goods.
It is astonishing how cheap certain lines of dress goods are in New York this year. In the first place there is the old Henrietta, which can be bought in all the fashionable colors at about fifty cents a yard, forty-four inches wide, serges, in stripes and plain, and from forty-five to sixty-five cents, homespun, from thirty cents up; shepherd checks and light weight chevrot, from fifty cents, and a plainer quality, which is seen, white, black and colored. Some of the white is made up their skirts and collars, and the effect is delicately beautiful. The black is made up over scarlet or yellow or some other color with excellent taste. For those of a cruder fancy silk and satin are made up under the black grenadines. Russian net will be worn to some extent, and so will the Spanish and Chantilly flouncings, but the real fin de siècle is grenadine or beige."

"Then you prefer an undemonstrative woman?" exclaimed I, eagerly. "I do to-day," was the reply.

Not satisfied with these responses I pursued the matter further, until I became a perfect Sphynx, propounding my conundrum to all comers, and never finding the Edipus who could solve it satisfactorily until, after consulting many men and some women, among my own observations at all sorts of parties and places, I came to the conclusion that the question is too complicated to be settled by a yes or no, or indicated by any positive and dogmatic reply.

My cynical friend's confession that at different times he liked different styles of women, and no one style satisfied him, might be truthfully echoed by three-quarters of his sex. As a general thing, a very young man setting in life with some sort of ideal in his mind, not generally copied from his sisters, finds it most nearly realized in the staidness and gardenilly style of girl. He does not know much about her, for she says little and looks so little and does so little that she remains inscrutable, but his fancy invests her with all sorts of lofty perfections of mind and heart, and if he has to live with her, sympathy or emulation, he meekly concludes that he is so far beneath her level that she cannot descend to his feelings.

This kind of Ednyfancy fancy for the moment does not generally terminate in marriage, or, if it does, said is Ednyfancy's waking when he discovers that his goddess is only moonshine and his wife is a cold, hard, narrow woman who does not share his emotion at any simple thing. He is married in 1858 to John Fritz, a German, and in the year 1858, together with her husband and only son, Andrew Fritz, now a prosperous and highly respected citizen of St. Cloud, immigrated to America and removed to Sandusky, O., where they resided until 1857.

From there they went to Minnesota, locating at St. Paul, and in 1861 removed to their present home, which is still their home. Rosina, the other twin sister, was married to Edward Sweth in 1851. Five children were born to this couple, all of whom have since died—three in Germany, the other two in this country. Her husband died in Germany, and as a widow she came to this country in 1868, residing with her son-in-law, Henry Kater, ever since. The parents of the two women both reached the age of nearly ninety years, and present indications would predict a longer lifetime for the twins than that of their parents.

The resemblance in appearance of the pair is so great that many times intimate friends, who have known them since their residence here, have been deceived in their identity. Rosina has often been mistaken for her sister. At the same time, needed medical treatment and called in the doctor, who was a friend of her sister, and when she became convalescent she asked the doctor for her hair. He answered that on account of the many favors shown in business relations he wouldn't charge a cent, not knowing that the sneeze was grateful of course, but he's going to lick the hired man some day this spring.—Detroit Free Press.

The Fashions of Paris.
There is something to suit every one in the spring modes this season. For the tall and slender figure is the panner, which adds so much grace and roundness of outline, and it is now a fixed fact. A beautiful design in this style was an afternoon robe made of cream colored china silk figured with tiny roses and brown saffron. The front was made of the china silk, gathered in a Spanish honore, and the corsage draped by shaped of the same. The princess back was of the saffron. The panels had a band of Honiton lace laid backward, and in front there were flots of brown velvet ribbon.

Another very handsome mode for a reception or dinner dress for ladies who do not wish to go décolleté is of lilac falls, with a plain skirt slightly draped and trained, and a Louis XV coat of deep velvet ribbon.
