While there engaged in such work as she could perform, her liability to headaches of great severity and the pain occasioned by any work requiring a stooping posture, were no ticed by one of the house physicians, who in a leisure time thought fit one day to examine her head. This resulted in the discovery of a persisting fontanel, or aperture between the cranial bones, a thing not unheard of in adults but rare enough to excite the attention upon the president, vice-president of the hospital physician, to whom thereupon the girl became an object of sudden interest. They worked upon her with enthusiasm, and succeeded in effecting the proper closure. Now, the point of the story is that, thus furnished, she assumed her proper brightness, and returned to her former service, where she became one of the most accomplished of housemaids, uniting to her old conscientiousness and willing effort a retentive memors, power of prevision, great capacity for quick learning-in short, a remarkable degree of general intelligence. We do not give the name of the hospital, for fear lest the physicians may be overrun by processions of dull servants coming to be made over; but we cite the case with the Paris operation as a curious instance of like effects produced by means which in form were precisely opposite. -N.
