

FIRST IN THE FIELD.

WOMEN WHO HAVE LED THE WAY
IN NEW PROFESSIONS.

The Medical Profession, Journalism, Art, Wall Street, etc.—Heroin, Bravery, Fortitude and Principle—What Has Been Won for the Sex.

Copyright, 1911, by American Press Association.

What is the charm that hangs around the pioneer in every field of human endeavor? What is the underlying feeling in our hearts that dignifies the curiosity we all feel about the women or men who were, or are, the first in the work of civilization and progress? Is it not a deeper instinct even than the desire to know of the last century, managed the Newport Mercury; to Mrs. Holt who, about the same time, took up the management of the New York Gazette after the death of her husband; to Fanny Wright, known as a lecturer as well as a pioneer; to the newspaper woman writer with the Tammany leaders in 1829-31, it must never be forgotten that the champion daily newspaper woman of the world was Elizabeth Mallett.

It is difficult to find who is the champion pioneer among the daily newspaper women of the passing period. I am inclined to give the palm to Miss Helen Morgan, the veteran cattle, horse and live stock reporter of the New York Times. Mr. John Mulvaney of metropolitan newspaper fame, is my authority for saying that Miss Morgan, a lady by birth, the daughter of a noble Irish knight or baronet, certainly a landed proprietor, was at an early age, prior to the war, a reporter on The Tribune at the time that Mr. Greneyer, Henry J. Raymond were associates on that paper; that when Mr. Raymond took charge of The Times with Mr. Jones, Miss Morgan went over to The Times, to which journal she has been attached ever since. She looks almost as young now as she did when I came to New York twenty years ago, and is apparently full of life, color and enthusiasm for her specialty. She has wonderful "staying powers," to use the turfman's language.

Of good stock was produced that daughter of New Bedford, Mrs. Hester Holden Robinson Green Fiske. Mr. Henry Clegg in his famous book, "Twenty-eight Years in Wall Street," admits an exception to the rule that "women lack the mental equipment for financial operations" and should "keep out of Wall Street."

At any rate, "Mrs. Hetty Green," as Mr. Clegg calls her, should come next to and by the side of Mrs. Fiske. Robinson Green Fiske, the title of champion pioneer among New England women in the fields of business and finance. She inherited two princely fortunes from her father, the title of business sagacity doubled her wealth over and over again, until now she is said to be the possessor of $175,000,000, and the richest woman in North America. She is the mother of Mr. E. H. R. Green, who as reported by the New York Herald is one long to be the "future newspaper king," by establishing a Chicago paper with six issues in New York, Boston and perhaps several other large cities. If Mr. Green inherits his mother's genius along with her millions he will not only be the unchallenged modern Croesus, but with his newspapers at his back will be able to command the whole boundless continent, if he only knows how to hold the reins and handle the scepter.

Women pioneers in ancient and medieval art, the women artists of the Old World, will be passed over in this paper. The pioneers in sculpture and painting in America are women of no mean fame. Miss Hoener and Miss Ream and George Campbell are at once called to mind. The works of the two first ladies are well known to the public at large. Miss Campbell's is not so generally known. But the high praise that has been bestowed upon her is proved to be her just desert by the quality of the sitters drawn to Miss Campbell's studio. Among them have been Senators Leland Stanford and Hearst, the Drexels, Mrs. Hopkins-Searles and Eli Tagler. A clipping of a paper a letter reaches me from Miss Campbell from Newport. She tells me she has just received from France a commission to paint five members of a French family. She says: "I am invited to come over next spring for this purpose. It is a great compliment, it is not, to be invited to go to France to paint."

All Americans will, no doubt, take the keenest interest in the future career of this young artist, who, at an early age, under Bernard, a pupil of Paul Delacroix, gave such evidence of her genius in this particular line of art that she has been successively given the entree as a student of the studios of Lavassure, Healy and other artists in Paris, and last year that of the studio of the painter, Emily Verdeby-Battey.

Miss Field dresses simply in gowns of rich material—evidently made by an artist—and she wears them with such grace and comfort that the idea of a perfectly well dressed woman is quickly realized, although an observer cannot readily explain how the effect is produced. Dress, however, is only a "side show" with Miss Field. When speaking of some dinner party or fashionable reception which she is expected to attend she says with a sigh, "I suppose I shall have to wear my 'stove clothes'—a description of Worth's symphonies which that great man will not understand until he is born all over again."

Comparatively few young housewives realize how much savour can be imparted to the first breakfast in the morning. The pickle the entire reserve for sheer want of knowledge, instead of keeping them in a cool, dry place for gradual use, frying, broiling, baking, etc. They may be cooked just like the ripe vegetable. Especially are they good stuffed with minced meat highly seasoned, and then baked and served in their own sauce.

Since 1871 the Congressional churches in England have increased from 3,000 to 4,700. The sixteen counties of Montana average a greater size than the state of Massachusetts.

AN EASY SEAT.
Florence Tyng Describes a Japanese Settee.
Comfortable Japanese settees are made of wood and ivory simply fashioned, with plain rungs or turned according to price. The top is an inverted square oval, if such a thing can exist, or in other words, it is hollowed out. The settee alone is comfortable, and gives the idea a carpenter could make one at trifling cost. The four legs and strengthening rungs should be solidly knitted together.

Then use the requisite number of barrel slats, cut off the required length for the seat, firmly nailed together, with a piece of barrel hoop iron on the lower and upper sides. You have the hollowed seat. Painted with enamel paint in yellow and black or red and black, the seat of one shade and the legs and rungs attractively cut up in color, keeping an eye well on the symmetry of the change in color, this design makes a splendid seat, if cushioned with a Japanese pillow or heavy linen, for piazza or hallway. A new finished article would be needed for drawing room or parlor.

The loveliest and feather cushions cover these settees in white and gold structures or natural wood, to be had also in cherry, oak or ebony. Oriental cushions, or those of China silk, edged about with a narrow ruff made double in the silk; this ruff should not be over two inches in depth and it is set about the seam around the pillow. Fine Japanese cushions for the toilet table come adorned with the inevitable little ruff as well of soft silk also. In these latter, however, the corners of the ruff are drawn tightly up against the cushion, producing a jaunty appearance. The round rush mats, sold for ten cents, are used in many ways, one of the best adaptations proving that of a tray, to hold a leather or jeans or any heavy material cushion. This is best filled with hair, as it is to be used as a footstool.

Many ladies, and gentlemen as well, fancy a tiny pillow for a footstool, which is adjusted in length. I have seen a very attractive stool of this description, filled with a blue jeans pillow, about four feet and a half square, well stuffed to hold its shape firmly.

The wife of the editor of the New York Morning Advertiser, a Virginia girl by birth and education. She was born thirty years ago in Richmond, where, as Miss Leonora Alma Barner, she was the toast of her father's dinner. She married Colonel John A. Cockerill nine years ago, going to New York to live when her husband took charge of the New York World.

Mrs. Cockerill is of medium height, splendidly proportioned, with a neck and arm fitted for an artist's model. In complexion she is a pink blond, with hair like burnished copper. Her eyes are brown and, her pearly teeth are inclosed with perfectly formed lips. Her hands and feet are exquisitely small and dainty, her shoes being No. 2, though she has never worn a tight shoe or slipper.

The Cockerill residence is at 470 Lexington avenue, where, during the winter, they receive their friends on Thursday evenings. There youth, beauty, brains and distinction are to be found. Struggling genius and genius lauded, the rich and the poor, all meet on the same level, the generous host and hostess affable to all alike.

Katie got the Book. Katie was going to bed after a day of tending her sick and named her chronic invalids all of them—and her be-a-tiful duck, the one old quacker that traveled with the team because he had no better company. The robin that had been watching her out of the corners of his bright eyes, as he ran over the lawn and listened to her prattle, was asleep already with his head on his wing, and Katie's hand lay on her mother's shoulder as she was undressing her. "Now you are closing she said suddenly but upright."

"Mamma," she said, "I want Johnnie's picture book that with the lambs." "Hush, Katie," said her mother, the least bit wearily, for the little feet and the little tongue had never ceased going one moment all day. "Now we will go to sleep."

"But, mamma," and the big eyes pleaded earnestly, "can't I have Johnnie's picture book this morn'g?" "Not tonight, Katie; it is too late." "Mamma," said Katie, sitting up very straight and looking very solemn indeed, "I heard a story of a little girl—she was a good little girl—that asked her mamma when she was put to bed for the picture book with the lambs, and the mamma told her she couldn't have it, and—and—" the baby voice fell to an awed whisper and the eyes grew very big—"in just—about—two—minutes—she was dead!"

she meant well. In enforcing the postal law hundreds of cases are investigated by the postoffice authorities which are not brought to the attention of the courts, and in which no punishment is asked for. There have been technical infractions of the law, but without guilty intention upon the part of the cases managed.

Such a case was settled by Mr. George S. Evans, the postoffice inspector in charge at the Federal building, and in which no punishment is asked for. There have been technical infractions of the law, but without guilty intention upon the part of the cases managed.

One of the largest corporations of Boston has frequent occasion to send notices to stockholders and directors and circulars to customers. They are almost always in print, and being put in an unsealed envelope requires a one-cent stamp.

A large lot of notices were sent out a day or two ago. The secretary ordered a sufficient number from the printer, and when the lot arrived handed them to a lady clerk, with instructions to be sure and mail them that night to the gentlemen whose names and addresses were contained upon a list which he furnished her. He went away before her work was completed.

The lady wrote the directions on all her envelopes, and then began to fold in the circular letters. She found the printer had placed the notices in the wrong order, and she needed twenty more. She had received previous orders to the whole number to the printer, and when the lot arrived handed them to a lady clerk, with instructions to be sure and mail them that night to the gentlemen whose names and addresses were contained upon a list which he furnished her.

Leeds (England) dentist is said to have a small boy sit in his office and yell at the top of his lungs occasionally. It lends an air of business to the establishment. The late Charles Bradshaw played a strong game of chess, and ranked among the best players of England. He was also an expert in checkers and other similar games.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla. PREPARED BY Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Sold by all Druggists and Dealers in Medicine.

The Festive Drummer. In the Characteristic Style of B. S. Clark of the Racket.

Listen while he gives you a pointer well worth pinning in your hat for future reference. There are no less than One Hundred Drummers who are owned and controlled by the Wholesale Houses of the City of Portland. Their expenses and wages will average Ten Dollars per day to the man, or $1,000 EVERY DAY, or Thirty Thousand Dollars per Month, or Three Hundred and Sixty Thousand Dollars a Year.

Do You Know why Goods are High? Do You Know why Times are Hard? Have you any idea what proportion of this vast sum the consumers of Old Yamhill pay? Don't you know that every article you buy of the merchants who patronize the drummers is taxed to defray their expenses? Do you think the Retailer forgets to charge it to you? Or that the Wholesaler fails to charge it to the retailer? Do You Know the Remedy for All This? GO TO B. S. CLARK OF THE RACKET!

He buys for Cash in the East! He does not owe any merchant on Earth. He sells for Cash, and he can and will sell you goods in his line cheaper than any house in the County dare do.
