CHAPTER IV.

"WHO GOES THAR?"

The mounted searchers went up the road along which Bell and I had come, and the sound of their excited voices could be heard long after the tramping of the horses' hoofs died out. After a short consultation we decided to stick to the road for the present. It certainly led northward, and the walking along it was preferable to blundering blindly through the woods and across half cleared fields. Traveling at night had the adas to direction.

At the first stream that crossed the road, and there were many of them, we pull on our boots, we were loath to leave the cool water, and finally we carried our boots and kept on in our stockings, a test of endurance that did not last long, for by daylight the feet were gone and we threw the legs a way.

We had been walking, with only a few brief halts, for about eight hours, and we twenty miles when daybreak found us at the fork of two roads. The one to the right showed signs of constant travel. and that to the left was corduroy, and appeared to lead into a swamp extending
