It is generally known that presidential years are not as productive, in more ways than one, as odd years, when the excitement of political life has compar-ister each week. Thanks. excitement of political life has comparatively less to do with determining the outcome of universal prosperity, than political aggrandizement. It is the history of this country, that presidential years are, as a rule, less profitable to the masses than at any other period.

Here is a sentence from the speech of Gov. Boies, lately delivered in Denver. The democratic party has its eye upon

He says it is the mission of the democracy in 1892 to struggle for an opportunity to "divide the mighty currents that are emptying the wealth of this nation into the hands of a few men and scatter their golden contents among those who produce it.'

The county has published its court proceedings twice in the newspapers and this office has received seven orders for single papers containing them from people who do not take the paper. This shows that the people desire to know the condition of the county finances and for what the expenditures of county funds are made.
