Ate 930 lemons in sixty days. This is the accomplishment of a resident of the him that he had been seriously mistaken and that cold baths were quite the thing for rheumatism, so the victim took cold baths, which in a short time almost caused ossification, so he stopped this so called remedy.

After having tried a number of like treatments, upon the recommendation of people who claimed to be his friends, Unverzagt was told one day that lemons, taken properly, would effect a positive and permanent cure of his sickness. His he knew a thing or two about such matters. His manner was so convincing that his victim determined to give his advice a little practice. He must eat a ward, decreasing the dose in the same manner as he had advanced until another thirty days were up, when he would be a cured man.

Unverzagt had always heard that lemons were good for rheumatism, and this fact made him place more than ordinary faith in the new prescription. He commenced the treatment about seventy days ago and, strange to say, carried it out to the very letter. He ate 930 lemous in that time, and now the wonder is that he is living.
