DR. NELSON'S

DECISION.

Speaking of patent medicines, the

Dr. says: "I wish to deal fairly and honorably with all, and when an article that will do what is recommended to do, I am not named to say so. I am acquainted with Dr. Vanderpool (having been treated by him for cancer), and have used his blood medicine as the S. B. Headache and cure, and while I am seventy years old, and have used my pills and other remedies for blood, liver and kidneys, I glance over for a kidney tonic in the blood, or to correct the action of the stomach and bowels it is a very superior remedy, and is anything I ever tried.

RACE FOR THE NORTH POLE

NANSEN AND HIS QUEER SHIP

HAVE STOOD.

Norway's Explorer Expects to Float

Through the Sea of Ice, Peary Will Try to Find Out What There is Beyond

Greenland, and Jackson of England goes

By Way of Franz Josef Land.

The fever for exploration is beginning to burn again in men's breasts.

The records of northern exploration show that human effort in this direction undergoes regular variations through cycles of years with periods of maximum and minimum intensity like the spots on the sun and certain epidemics. There is reason to believe that the world is entering upon one of those maximum periods of north pole enthusiasm. Lieutenant Peary scarcely returned from the northernmost point of Greenland, is preparing actively to set out with another expedition in a few weeks. Nansen, the Norwegian explorer, the man who first crossed

Greenland from east to west, has already sailed for the Bering sea, whence he will launch forth on a perilous journey through the ice. Lieutenant Melville, the explorer who found the bodies of De Long and his comrades, has a pet scheme for trying to reach the north pole by the way of Franz Josef Land and is anxious to put it into execution.

Besides these there are several other polar expeditions planning in several other parts of the world.

The close of the nineteenth century, therefore, will witness a plucky race for the pole, with brave fellows in the running, generation after generation, and little to show for it. Two hundred and eighty-six years ago that valiant Dutch navigator, Henry Hudson, reached 83 degrees, 23 minutes north latitude, in his clumsy wooden sailing vessel. The best Lieutenant Peary could do last year with all his science and fine equipment, was to reach 82 degrees, 34 minutes, and the best that has ever been done, the great record among all polar explorers, is 83 degrees, 44 minutes, made by two officers of the Green expedition in 1882. That means that modern civilization has been able, in nearly 300 years, to gain only 200 miles on the record of Hudson, made three centuries ago. At that rate, allowing an advance of one degree a century, the north pole would be discovered about the year 2900 A. D.

Fortunately there is good reason to think that the tragical and unsatisfactory of the past will not be forever repeated. Arctic explorers, like other men, learn from the mistakes of their predecessors, although it must be admitted they learn slowly. There is a general disposition today among those who can speak authoritatively, to admit that for two hundred years or more searchers for the pole have been working on a false scent. They have made little progress because they have insisted on violating or disregarding one of nature's simplest laws. Curiously enough during the same long period the men who have been laboring to solve the problem of aerial navigation have been suffering from the same mistake. Inventors of flying machines have been deluded by the idea that a body lighter than air could be driven through it. Searchers for the north pole have been deluded by the idea that a body lighter than the ice could be driven through it. Searchers for the north
