It might be well to remark that Senator Chas. Cogswell, who is spoken of for governor on the democratic ticket, would be a hard man to defeat and if elected would make a good governor.

The city printing of Portland has been let to the evening Telegram, notwithstanding the fact that the Dispatch made the lowest bid for it. This move when retrenchment is demanded is rather peculiar.

The Rocky Mountain News has developed into a populist paper and remarks that the cause of silver and the revival of American industries rests with the people's party. It will be a cold day for American industry when the people's party is in power.

His name having been mentioned in connection with the secretaryship of state on the republican ticket next June, Harrison R. Kincaid, of Eugene, thus denies his candidacy in his own paper: "We are not a candidate for any political nomination and are not seeking nor expecting any political office."

A suicidal mania is said to be prevailing in London and Paris at the present time, many of the victims being young men and women in comfortable circumstances who have no apparent cause for putting an end to themselves. It is attributed by some to the long spell of hot dry weather which has visited Europe this summer.

The Oregon Pacific route to San Francisco for wheat and oats from any point on its line is $2.50 per ton, just 50 cents more per ton than the Southern Pacific charges from McMinnville to Portland, a distance of 50 miles. Build that motor line. The farmers can build it and make money out of the first crop shipped over it to the Willamette river.

The stranger visiting a city for the first time does not always remember the handsome buildings it may have; but if it has execrable streets, such as ours have been, he never forgets them and will not fail to mention the fact when speaking of the place and his conclusions and comments will not be favorable, but if the streets be handsomely improved he will always carry with him an impression of the fact and it will unconsciously shape his opinion of the city and its people and he will almost invariably speak well of them. The fact is that improvements are not alone a help to the street improved but to the adjacent streets and property. Almost always an improvement in one street is followed by general repairs and overhauling of all the property contiguous thereto.—Oregon City Enterprise.

WHAT IS FREE TRADE?

Our esteemed and always intelligent contemporary, the Rochester Democrat, has, in its issue of the 10th inst., considered a tariff for revenue only, substantially identical with a free trade tariff. "Free trade," says our contemporary, "is practised only by barbarous nations and savage tribes, and is not worth talking about as a policy for civilized people." "England's tariff system is avowedly that of free trade."

A great many delusions are abroad in the world through the frequent use of misleading phrases. For instance, England is so far from being a free trade country, that the tariff system there employed is distinctly protective, in spite of all pretenses that are current. Up to 1846 the farmers were protected by adequate duties on foreign corn. These duties were effectively abolished, and free trade in corn was proclaimed; but the real nature of this measure was to take the protection away from the farmers and give it to the manufacturers. Since then the farmers of England have been ruined, but the manufacturers have prospered. Sir Robert Peel, who carried the measure, called it free trade. In the same way the duties on tea and coffee were abolished in the United States in 1822, and so far as those articles are concerned, free trade with foreign countries was established. But in reality the abolition was a protective measure, just like the abolition of the corn laws in England in 1846; and it was passed in order that heavier duties might be imposed upon foreign articles coming into competition with American productions. It is the purpose for which a thing is done that determines the true character of it.

Strictly speaking, a tariff for revenue only has no relation to free trade and may tend not to promote the establishment of free trade, but the contrary. It imposes duties upon foreign imports, and that is the reverse of free trade. For instance, it must lay duties on tea and coffee, which are free under our protective system. Thus it is not only not free trade, but it is the exact opposite of free trade.

The only true and perfect system of free trade ever known among governments and communities of equal rank and equal importance, is that which prevails within the United States. Not only is it free in fact, but it is free in purpose. There is nothing like it among separate states anywhere else.

The avowed end for which the protective system was established in this country was to develop important branches of industry, and thus render the nation independent of foreign powers. The latest and most striking instance of this operation was when, at the request of the late Secretary Stanton, urged in the very crisis of the civil war, congress imposed a heavy duty on the importation of foreign quinine. The immediate effect was the establishment of the domestic manufacture and we have seen that the United States is now independent and perfectly able to face the competition of German, English or French chemists in that branch. But without such a protective duty, unconstitutional as the Chicago platform proclaims it to be, we might have arrived at such independence; and certainly we could not have supplied ourselves with that indispensable article during the civil war, had France or England, turned against us and closed our ports by the presence of hostile cruisers. Now, however, the case is different. A just and equal tariff for revenue only can be imposed upon foreign quinine without any danger of our running short of the article. We trust we have now made clear to our estimable contemporary the distinction belonging to this country, between free trade and a revenue tariff.—New York Sun.

THE MOVEMENT TOWARD CIVILIZATION.

The complaint about the continual movement of population from country to city is a good deal like a protest against the law of gravitation. The same story is heard everywhere; the swarming city is a feature alike of old countries and new, of countries whose general population is sparse as well as of densely peopled lands. One can understand how London has grown into a province, with a population as large as that of Canada, and it seems strange that in Australia, where there are sought the room for everybody, the practice of crowding into cities goes on in the same way. One-third of the population of New South Wales live in Sydney, and two-fifths of the population of Victoria in Melbourne. Again, in the United States, a country of enormous territory and a great variety of climate, more than 2,300,000 people are crowded into New York and Brooklyn, where the climate in the summer months is execrable, and where all but the most wealthy must resign themselves to the loss of many of the comforts of home, including a separate house for a family. In Canada the movement does not strike us so forcibly, because a large part of the migrants from the country or small towns go to the United States instead of to our own cities.

There can be no question that this concentration of population has its evils. It means a movement not only toward crowded places, but toward crowded occupations. A large proportion of the inhabitants of cities and towns are of the manufacturing classes. Their callings are as necessary and useful as that of the farmer, but they are more subject to disturbance. The competition is fiercer; the progress of invention is accompanied by much hardship; the skill and training which are the stock-in-trade of an artisan become valueless, and he is forced to seek employment in some labor-saving device. Now and then there is an over production, necessitating the closing down of factories. Commerce employs another large part of the population of cities, and in no other field is there such a liability to disturbance and panic. The apparent ease with which large fortunes are occasionally made by merchants attracts into business life many who are unfit for it, and who not only fail themselves, but cause others to fail. Then the opportunities of city life encourage the growth of a large class of people who live, more or less respectably, on their wits, and add nothing to the wealth of the country, and are a burden upon their fellows.

The nervous strain, the temptations, the dangers of cities are the theme of many a solemn discourse. The boys are exhorted not to leave the farm with its healthful life, peace and independence, for a life of drudgery in shop or office, with intervals of feverish and unwholesome excitement. But the boy usually prefers to listen to the voices that call rather than the voices that warn, and it probably never will be otherwise, for the motives that send him to the city are among the most powerful that human nature, and especially the nature of the dominant races, knows. Still he has learned the sad lesson of defeat. It is vain to preach to a man the blessings of peace. He loves strife rather, the chance to measure his powers against those of his fellows. The very health and strength that he has gained in the country inspire him with confidence that he can hold his own in the battle. Why, he asks, should he not become the famous lawyer, the bold financier, the leader of men, rather than one of the failures of the great crowd of unfortunates and drudges of city life? Even if his ambition soars not so high, he longs for a closer view of the great drama of which he catches glimpses in the newspaper that reaches the farm or village, to be an eye witness of those wonderful events that are related in its columns. Work, strife, pleasure, all are carried on among those great aggregations of human beings at a high pressure, and he will always be attracted in spite of all the warnings of wisdom and experience.

Not is the attraction altogether illusory. City life possesses many solid advantages. It offers, even to poor men, conveniences and luxuries that cannot be otherwise obtained. The city commands the services of the ablest men, skilled physicians, ripe scholars, brilliant lawyers, eloquent divines. The metropolitan newspaper enables the citizen to know every day what is going on in the great world about him. If the opportunities for evil in the metropolis are many, so are the opportunities for good. It is the great battlefield for the eternal war between Ormuz and Ahirman. If it is the scene of excessive and fantastic vice, it is also the birthplace of great moral reforms. If it displays in most exaggerated forms the contrast between grinding poverty and enormous wealth, it also shows the results of the faith of our social fabric, it calls forth the largest philanthropy, and the most earnest efforts to grapple with and solve social problems. The employer may be more reluctant than in the country, but the trades union is stronger. Whoever fights a battle for justice and right finds in the city not only a host of enemies, but comrades and friends to give him comfort, aid and encouragement.—Toronto Globe.

BEES.

A while ago the surveyors of the Victoria Nyanza railroad toiled up a mountain to make instrumental observations of the surrounding country. Behind them were negroes carrying the surveying instruments. The ascent was steep, and was possible only along a narrow pathway. Suddenly the men with the instruments faced about and beat a hasty and ignominious retreat down the hill. A swarm of angry bees had issued from a hole in the cliff, their malignancy fully aroused, and their weapons of offence all ready for use. The railroad survey was suddenly suspended, and all work ceased for nearly half a day. The instrument bearers did not venture to return. The surveyors were prisoners on the mountain side, for they did not dare to run the gauntlet of the enraged insects; and they waited until after dark, when the bees had gone to sleep, before they tipped around to the enemy's stronghold and returned to camp.

Four months ago a German, Capt von Manteuffel, marched against a rebel chief in East Africa, and coming to a hostile village, ordered its bombardment with hand grenades. At the fourth shot the enemy was unexpectedly reinforced by a swarm of bees, which with the utmost bravery, attacked the troops in front and rear, and on both flanks. The panic that seized these beleaguered soldiers was irresistible, and they took to the woods on a lively run, many throwing away their guns and ammunition in their tremendous haste to get a way. It took an hour to rally the fugitives, and when they returned to the serious business of the day, they found that the natives had also lit out into the woods.

These are the latest illustrations of the venerable history of truth, that when bees are well they can put to rout the heroes of many battles, who would scorn to be dismayed by musketry or cannon.

The new postal money orders to be provided by the government will soon be issued. In the new system there will be no complication. Sheets will be issued calling for amounts from one cent to three dollars, which can be torn off to suit the purchaser. The postmaster will have no writing to do on it, the sender simply endorsing it the same as a check or draft. One cent will pay the charges on any amount up to three dollars, instead of three cents as now.

M. Humbery, a well-known business man of Hillsboro, Va., sends this testimony to the merits of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. "Several years ago, I hurt my leg, the injury leaving a sore, which would not heal. My sufferings were extreme, say less, from the knee to the toe, being so excruciating, that I was unable to move, and before I had finished the first bottle, the pain had entirely ceased. The second bottle effected a complete cure."
