

THE REPORTER

McMINNVILLE, OREGON, SEPT 27, 1883.
SUPPORT YOUR LOCAL JOURNAL.

A newspaper to be successful must receive support, says the Oregon Sentinel; it must have friends. If it merits the friendship of the community where it is published, it should receive cordial patronage. Where can a man find a better friend than a good news journal? It brings to him the latest reports of national doings, of the actions of foreign governments and peoples, of occurrences of public interests at home. It discusses in its editorial columns matters of immediate importance to everybody. It presents its views upon the great questions of the day, which, whether right or wrong, must lead a man to form more intelligent conclusions than if he had not read a discussion of the subject. It would be absurd to expect an editor's views to be always correct; but taken for all they are worth, it must be conceded that the intelligence of the country is in a great measure guided by the free and full ventilation which local and general topics receive in the columns of the papers. If the arguments which the editorials contain are weak, their weakness will quickly be shown up by a contemporary press; if they are valid and convincing, the more they are assailed the more clearly do they appear.

The paper that is true to itself will be true to its party. It will advise them; it will defend them; it will keep them informed, and it will help them obtain for their principles the recognition which they deserve. No party in this age can hope to succeed without a newspaper for its organ. It has to share the abuse which is heaped upon its party, and it is the rule that its share is always the greatest. It is perhaps, well that it is so; for no individual is in so good a position to defend himself as a newspaper man. He is a privileged mortal. Press discussions, although very acrimonious at times, ultimately result in good; in fact there is no better way of getting at the truth than by reading two journals of the opposite stripe in politics.

Journals in large cities give more news and contain fuller reports of public meetings than do the local papers. They can do this because their circulation warrants their employing much larger forces than can be put on a paper in smaller places. That the news that they contain is better than that found in a good local paper we will not admit; for with the present facilities for sending reports to every town of any importance in the country, the cream is furnished the smaller newspapers; and the man who takes his home paper gets all the news much earlier than he would by taking the large city sheet as the telegraph is faster than the mail train; and he is not troubled with the skim milk.

The home paper is the one a man looks to for a defence when he is unjustly attacked. Where his enemies set him wrong before the public, he finds his local paper the best agent to set him right. In no other way can so many persons be informed of his innocence in so short a time as they can by reading the proofs of it in the newspaper published where he resides. No man knows how much he owes to the papers of his own town and party until they are called upon to defend him from the malicious attacks of his enemies. Then he finds it good to have the truth told about him by the newspaper. Any local journal which will not defend the citizens of its own town when unjustly attacked, is unworthy of the patronage of the community.

The advertising columns of a newspaper are by no means the least important. The news which they contain are very valuable, and it is the better the more contributors there are to this department. So many do not read the advertisements as read the local news but those who do read them are the select class that the man who inserts the matter wants to reach. The advertiser most quickly finds out who his friends are. An editor may write article after article, and never know how they take with the public; but an advertiser has only to publish a few lines one to find that he is a leading man, and leading them in a direction that it pays to take. He has the advantage of making himself known to those, whom he is delighted to meet. Many persons are willing to contribute to our columns, but no contributions are so welcome to us as new advertisements—we do not call our pay for the same or the subscription payment, a contribution, that belongs to us.

Stand by your home newspaper, for it is one of your best friends. It does more to increase the value of your estate than any of your neighbors do; it tells you where you can obtain the best and most goods for the least amount of money; it lets you know all that is going on in the world around you that is worth knowing; it works for you; it stands up for you, and it protects your home and educates your children.

There is something startling in the report from Guyman: "2,000 people stricken down by yellow fever since September 1st."

On the 21st inst. President Arthur telegraphed the emperor of Brazil. That announces another cable.

Colfax City will be in railway communication with Portland October 15th.

FROST AND THE CROPS.

From quite all of the middle and northwestern states comes the telegraphic report of an early black frost and a consequent reduction in the volume of the later crops and vegetables. In many instances the ruin has been complete. It is stated that these states have experienced a low average temperature, which retarded the ripening process, especially of corn, and for this reason the damage by the frost has been greatly augmented. Here in the northwest we experience nothing of this misfortune. It is a misfortune, and one far-reaching to the farmer, since any material reduction in the cereal crops in the east means a diminished income to him. The fact that the frost does injure our crops is a strong inducement for the emigration of the eastern farmer.

Immigration.

The total number of immigrants landed at Castle Garden, New York, for the eight months ending August 31 is 234,963. This is a decrease of 55,572 from the number landed during the corresponding period last year. Each month of this year, with one exception, shows a falling off in the number of immigrants compared with the corresponding month last year. The figures are as follows:

	1882.	1883.
January	11,242	8,348
February	16,752	13,213
March	40,691	28,081
April	69,694	53,882
May	88,768	69,563
June	51,188	53,178
July	37,013	32,350
August	28,165	26,311

The total immigration last year was more than 450,000. It is not probable that the total number landed this year will exceed 30,000. Last year, however, the immigration was unprecedentedly heavy. The arrivals this year will be far in excess of the average number during the last ten years. Superintendent Jackson said that the greatest proportionate decrease had been among Germans. Last year the arrivals from Germany numbered 192,657. This year the number will be about 30,000 less. He said that the grade of immigration was much better than in former years. There were fewer aged people, and the proportion of young men and women between the ages of 20 and 35 years was unusually large. Although efforts are making by landholders and the proprietors of factories in the south to induce immigrants to settle in that part of the country, few are willing to go there. Seventy-five per cent of the arrivals passed directly through to settlements in the western states. Mr. Jackson said that the number of cases of contagious diseases had been much smaller than for many years. There had been only two cases of small pox reported, and the general health of the immigrants had been good. Few complaints of bad treatment on the part of steamship officers had been received.

Homer Comfort, conductor upon a train between Portland and St. Paul, gave the following particulars of which is supposed to be the first accident occurring on the Northern Pacific railroad: Saturday evening as the train was pulling out of the station at Ainsworth, a young fellow with a tough-looking countenance, and evidently under the influence of liquor, attempted to get on board. He missed his footing, however, and was the next moment lying at full length underneath the cars. His right leg lay upon the track so that the wheels literally stripped every particle of flesh and muscle from the bone upon one side. The injured man was formerly a brakeman on the road, and was known as "Three-fingered Reddy." "Reddy" was alone to blame for the accident which befell him.

If more fruit and less vegetables were consumed by man, he would be all the better and wiser for the change. Apples contain more nutriment than potatoes, and the cost of them is no greater, yet how often do we find the latter upon the table where the former is wanting. It is not generally known that apples are possessed of valuable medicinal virtues, both as a preventive and as a cure of diseases. Malaria will seldom, or never, attack a family that has free access to the orchard in the summer time and to the cellar in the winter time. Besides being invaluable for human consumption, they are likewise excellent for hogs, cattle, horses and poultry.
