The friends numbered about forty, and found great pleasure in thus minimizing the reverend gentleman's grocery bill.

The young people of McMinnville will probably give a dance during this month, the proceeds to be given to the poor of the city. It is to be non-sectarian, non-clique, non-lodge, and for purely charitable purposes. The idea is to disburse the proceeds through a committee to be chosen by the people, they to purchase the needed aid and distribute it according to their best judgment. Properly patronized and conducted this will prove a very commendable work of charity.

Sheriff Henderson arrested William Livingston, a young man of Whiteoak, on Tuesday, for the alleged crime of breaking into a freight car at that place, and taking therefrom a sack of green coffee. The coffee was found in Livingston's cabin. He is the same fellow who was acquitted about a year ago of the charge of entering the house of Mr. Cox near Whiteoak and taking a gun. The trial is in progress before Justice Rhodes.

The improvement of streets and the waterworks plant were the subjects considered by the city council Tuesday evening. After the collection of outstanding taxes the city will have a road fund of about $800. With this the council proposes to do some street improvement with rock and gravel, where most needed. It will probably be inaugurated on north B street and the street from the McMinnville Flouring mills to the river warehouses. The city will propose to abating property holders that if they will petition and agree that such improvement be made with an expense to them not exceeding twenty cents per lineal foot, the city will stand the other four-fifths of the estimated cost. The council believes that a majority of the property holders will favor this work, and if they do not, the blame will rest with the council. No one will question the need of such improvement, and the city is in a position to do it. It is the universal testimony of people who travel that McMinnville streets are in worse condition than any roads outside. On the question of waterworks the council is obtaining probable cost of laying new mains, and establishing the works more securely on their present site. This they figure will cost less at this time than to remove them and obtain the supply from wells, and will answer all purposes until the city grows large enough to warrant bringing its water from the source which nature so abundantly supplies, the mountains. It has been found that the mains are badly rusted, and that new and stronger pipe is needed to withstand heavy pressure.

Persons who travel about some testify that McMinnville is the liveliest town in the valley.

Meeting of Taxpayers Called.

At the request of many I hereby call a meeting of the taxpayers of the city of McMinnville to convene at the council chamber on Wednesday next, February 13th, at half past seven o'clock in the evening, to consider and advise as to what should be done with reference to the waterworks. It seems certain that considerable money will have to be spent on these works soon, and the city officials desire a full discussion of the matter by the taxpayers. The matter ought to be thoroughly considered by all interested, and I am sure that those who are entrusted with the government of the city desire the advice and aid of the taxpayers in deciding what should be done, and how it ought to be brought about. It is desired that there be a full attendance of the taxpayers at the proposed meeting.

February 6th, 1895.

AMOS COOK.

Death of One of Oregon's Earliest Pioneers—Sketch of His Life.

Amos Cook, one of Oregon's earliest pioneers, who had lived in Yamhill county since 1840, died at his home near Lafayette on Sunday night, February 3, at 11.30 o'clock.

He was born in Washington county, Me., January 8, 1810. Like so many other young men of New England, he pushed out for the west, and in 1838 was at Peoria, Ill. In the early winter of that year, Rev. Jason Lee, who had just returned across the plains from Oregon, delivered a lecture on Oregon at Peoria. The lecture attracted the attention of a number of young men, who, having no means or resources than their own adventurous spirits, resolved to go to Oregon. They were able to get together but a very slender outfit, and they were late in starting, but finally got off in May, 1838, and proceeded to Independence, on the Missouri river.

The names of the members of this party were these: Thomas J. Farahan, Amos Cook, Joseph Holman, Sidney Smith, R. L. Kilborne, Francis Fletcher, James Wood, Charles Wood, Obadiah Oakley, and two others named Jordan and Blair. Before starting they proceeded to the door of a court house at Peoria, and having pledged themselves never to desert each other, they unfurled a flag, on which was inscribed "Oregon or the Grave," and declared their intention, upon reaching the Columbia river, to take possession of the most eligible points and make settlements. Of this party Amos Cook has long been the last survivor.

The party, however, did not hold together. At some distance out on the plains there was a separation. Sidney Smith, while drawing his rifle out from under a pile of pack-saddles, accidentally discharged it, wounding himself badly, and this occasioned delay. The party with which Cook remained got no further than Green river that year. It passed the winter at the place known as Brown's Hole, on that stream, and lived on buffalo meat. Buffalo were very plenty throughout the winter, and the gall bladder of the animal furnished a piquant sauce for the meat. Early in the following spring the party came on, and, passing down the Columbia river, reached Vancouver in May, 1840. Just as they reached Vancouver the vessel bearing Rev. J. L. Parrish and family arrived from the Atlantic; via Honolulu; and thus an overland party and a sea party of Americans met in this remote country, 65 years ago. Amos Cook and Francis Fletcher were close friends, and remained together. Cook at this time was a youth of 24; Fletcher was slightly older. Together they went to Yamhill and settled down as farmers. They were men of thrift and energy, and became prosperous. Each minded his own affairs, never seeking political place. Sidney Smith, another of the party, also settled in Yamhill. Smith and Fletcher died many years ago. After some years Cook went into mercantile business at Lafayette, erected some important buildings and became known as an active and enterprising man. Subsequently he returned to his farm, and in 1838 married Mary F. Scott, who, with four daughters, survives him.

There were no American settlers in Yamhill before Cook and Fletcher went there. We now recall but two persons surviving in Oregon who came before them, namely, the widow of Rev. Ekanah Walker, of Washington county, who came in 1838, and Rev. J. S. Griffin, also of Washington county, who came in 1839.

Amos Cook was a substantial and worthy man, a typical pioneer, a man of great energy and steadfastness, strictly honorable, of calculating industry, and always thrifty and prosperous. He was one of the earnest though unobtrusive men to whom Oregon owed much at her beginning. He came with that earliest migration, with that "first low wash of waves," to the country where now rolls this ever-increasing human sea. He did all his work well as he saw it or knew it; and, though he made no parade of it, yet in its results it will abide as a permanent force in the life of Oregon. He will be buried to-day at the Scott burial ground near Forest Grove.—[Oregonian 5th.]

She Would Neither Paint nor Powder.

"I positively will not use cosmetics," said a lady to the writer, "yet my complexion is so bad that it occasions me constant mortification. What can I do to get rid of these dreadful blotches?" "Take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription," was the prompt reply. "You can't see that indication that you are suffering from functional derangements. Remove the cause of the blotches and your cheeks will soon wear the hue of health. The 'Favorite Prescription' is a wonderful remedy for all diseases peculiar to your sex. Its proprietors guarantee to return the money if it does not give satisfaction. But it never fails. Try it." The lady followed my advice, and now her complexion is as clear as a babe's, and she enjoys better health than she has for many years.

To Amend the City Charter.

The following is the full text of Senator Calbreath's bill now pending before the legislature to amend the city charter. The only change that it makes is to provide for division of the city into three wards, thus providing for an equitable distribution of the governing power:

Section 1. That section 24 of the act to incorporate the city of McMinnville, Oregon, passed March 23, 1885, commencing at 10 o'clock a. m., the following property:

Twelve head of full-blooded Clydes horses, consisting of brood mares, colts and fillies. Such mares as Victoria I, Victoria III, Magist IV, Lochryun Lassie, and one of the best three-year-old stallions on the coast; dam Victoria (1839); sire Lochryun (23,181), blood bay, black points and is almost a perfect draft horse. Some half and seven-eighths blooded Clydes. Also road stock, consisting of Flora D, by Commoener, by Electioneer; dam, Corn, record 2:24; Black Boss, by Pat S, dam, by Constellation. One two-year-old filly, by Nooday; dam, Flora D, Argo, a fine three-year-old stallion, by Hambletonian Membrino; dam, Escinatti, by Woodbury, thoroughbred; fifth dam by imported James, etc. Flora D and Black Boss have colts at their sides from Argo; they are hard to beat. He shows himself a fine breeder.

At the same time he will be sold a wagon, self binder, mower, hay rake, plows, harness, etc.

This will be one of the best opportunities ever offered to secure good breeding stock for a very low figure. Times will not always remain as they are, and those who breed good horses now, and especially draft horses, will surely get good prices. Good horses are scarce, and as the times improve the horse market will advance. Everybody come to this sale and get something to improve your breeds while you can have them at your own price. Those going from Portland take the 6:30 train at the Holston house; returning the same day at 5:30.

Terms of sale: Six months will be given on good approved notes, bearing 6 per cent interest from date.

L. M. Cox.
