The attendance Saturday evening at the opera house to hear Judge Galloway's lecture on the public domain and its disposal, was exceedingly small, in view of the worthiness of the occasion. The judge has made an exhaustive study of this highly interesting subject, and his lecture was full of information valuable to any student, and so condensed and aggregated as to place a great deal of historical fact in little compass. The longer the judge spoke the more he warmed up to the subject, and the truth was evident, as he said, that the study was like a romance to him. One interesting fact brought out was that there are about 35 million acres of government land in Oregon, of which about 12 million acres remain unsurveyed.

The Ad Presses the Button--

The article must do the rest. Much of our stock was bought before the tendency to shoddy everything, hence there's a bigger-priced look about them. But we have to meet shoddy competition, and prices consequently have to be cut in two. Wouldn't you rather pay a few cents more for a pair of boy's pants that will wear six months to a year, than buy a 19-cent cotton shoddy that the average boy will run through with in two days? The same comparison holds to a greater or less degree in all lines. Buying a thing because its dirt cheap is a most ephemeral satisfaction, because the thing bought is of the same character.
