Don't be afraid hundred women, clad in the simple but must be plowed and then harrowed down to as fine condition as possible, The most important point in growing turnips is in the fine soil. Sow the seed in rows which will permit of using horse hoes, and seed with a hand drill, which is regulated so as to cover the seed perfectly. the plants may be thinned with a hoe. Cultivate as soon as the growth of the plants will permit. If this is not done weeds and grass may get the start, especially that persistent pest known as crab grass. A light skinning of the surface close to the plants after every rain, using a hand wheel hoe, will prevent weeds and grass. After the turnip plants have made considerable growth they shade the soil and can hold their own against weeds, but the best crops are secured when the turnips are kept clean. The ground should be manured and the manure worked in with the harrow before planting the seed.

Potatoes Among the Chinese.

It has always been supposed that as the potato is a native of the Rocky Its subjects can travel entirely round the other fruits, the raspberry especial- enough, so far as our present stock of potatoes was concerned. But the pocrown gall suggests the nature of the tato has been known thousands of years in China. It is said to grow wild in the regions of western China near the Tartary boundary. It is very largely grown there, and divides with rice the popular preference as an article of food. It is possible that the potato might have been introduced from western America in the long era when perhaps another continent lay between Asia and America, or when the Pacific was occasionally traversed by adventurous vessels which sailed around the coast in the far north, and then came southward to milder climates along our Alaskan coast.

Water in Farm Crops.

Those crops always pay best which have most water in them, as nature furnishes the water without charge. The farmer who sells potatoes or roots of any kind of fruits sells what is four-fifths water, while most of the solid part of the fruit or root is taken by the leaves from the air. In growing moisture in the soil is more important than manures. Whatever deepens the soil enables it to hold more moisture and to grow better those crops which depend on abundant supplies of water for success. It may seem paradoxical, but it is true that soil made deep by moistest in time of drought.

In the former case two or more coal barges are brought alongside of the boat at the wharf and manila fenders are suspended over the sides of the vessel to keep the two from injuring each other. Even under these most favorable conditions it takes hours or even days to coal a big ship. The best time the St. Paul could make before she was purchased by the Government was forty hours for taking on 3,000 tons of coal.

At sea when a ship needs coal it generally needs it very badly, and the coal must be transferred as soon as a collier can be brought to the boat, no matter what the weather may be, whether the sea be calm or the waves running mountain high. The collier must be fastened at both ends to the warship by cables. With these two vessels rolling and pitching to and from each other this joining of the two is a dangerous undertaking, for both might be sunk. It is said by some that we owe the of grass so that it required far greater fife-"ear-plercing," as Shakspeare calls it-to the Swiss, and Sir James Turner, who busied himself in writing on military matters, names it the "Allemaine whistle." In France it was employed at least as early as 1534, in which year it was ordered by Francis I. that each band of 1,000 men was to have four drums and two fifes.

A few years later, in England, we find "drommes and ffyffes" included in the muster of London citizens. Shakspeare refers to the musician, not the instrument, when he speaks in the "Merchant of Venice" of "the vile squealing of the wry-necked fife." An old writer observes, indeed, that a "fyfe is a wry-neckt musician, for he looks away from his instrument." About the reign of James II, the fife lost its popularity for a time, Sir James Turner observing: "With us, any captain may keep a fifer in his company and maintain him, too, for no pay is allowed him-perhaps just as much as Look out for sudden showers, which he deserveth."-Chambers' Journal.
