WHITESON.

Our school has two days' vacation this week.

Mark Holmes made Salem a pleasant visit this week.

C. E. DeLashmuth has returned to his post of duty at the depot.

Miss Bessie Linden spent Thanksgiving at her home in Sheridan.

Miss Edith Percival has purchased a fine large organ of Geo. C. Will of Salem.

A short temperance program will be rendered at our Sunday school next Sunday.

Mrs. Elizabeth Percival is spending a few days this week with friends in Mouth, her old home.

Robt. Carey, who has been our station agent for the past two months, returned to Independence this week.

Thos. Middaw has purchased the building west of the jelly factory, at present occupied by Frank Harpole.

Samuel Cunningham and Miss Lena Adams of this place were married at Amity last Sunday, Rev. H. Kershaw officiating.

CARLTON ITEMS.

We learn that Wm. Geldard is quite ill.

Miss Maggie Roberts is on the sick list this week.

The gobble of the Thanksgiving turkey is heard on our streets and a demand has arisen for cranberry sauce.

A party was held at Wm. Merchant's last Friday evening in honor of his daughter Winnie's birthday.

Peter Thomason and bride were at church here last Sunday receiving the congratulations of their numerous friends.

The entertainment given here Monday by Miss Mollie Steinburg, the blind vocalist, was well attended and thoroughly enjoyed by those present.

A literary and debating society was formed last Friday. The question for debate next Friday evening is, "Resolved, That an education is better for a young man than a fortune."

One of the wants of Carlton is a man to run a meat market two days each week, a barber shop on Saturday, and be content to rest the remainder of the week. It seems there is not enough work in either line to induce a man to remain, yet we feel the need of both barber and butcher.

An Oregonian's Narrow Escape.

Among the thirteen passengers saved, out of a total of 140, from the wreck of the steamer Mohican, which went down in the English channel, October 13th, was A. E. L. Smith of Ashland, who returned home recently and gives a graphic account of his experience in getting to shore. He went to England with a carload of horses, and was on his return when the sad wreck and terrible loss of life took place. His account is as follows:

"I went on board of the Mohican at Tilbury, at 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the 13th of October, and everything went well as far as I know until about 7 o'clock on Friday night. It was a beautiful clear night, with piercing cold wind and a rather heavy sea in the channel. When the announcement was made for dinner in the evening I went down to dress and had only reached my cabin when I heard a great crash, and then dishes and plates falling about the saloon. Fearing a collision I at once rushed on deck, and soon found that something very serious had happened to the ship. She appeared to be going down gradually and the lights were going out. The captain was on the bridge shouting: 'It is all right' and both he and the officers were doing their best to allay the fears of the passengers. The crew obeyed the orders which the captain gave from the bridge. When I learned that the affair was serious I at once rushed down to my cabin, in which I found a foot of water, and got a life-belt and then made my way to the deck again. The ship was then rapidly sinking. As I was running along the deck I found that the captain was by the side of me and I followed him. He had two life-belts on, one around his waist and the other around his hips. We both plunged into the water together just as the ship gave her last lurch, and then I swam away through the sea. The scene in the water was one of terror, and a most distressing one for me, and for the first few strokes I had to swim through shrieking, screaming, half-demented and half-dead human beings, and I had the utmost difficulty in getting away from them. The passengers, a moment previously had been ranged on the side of the ship and as she lurched they all seemed to plunge into the sea together, and they were swallowed up by the great wave which followed, and some of them never appeared above that wave. I swam my best and got away from the scene and the next thing that happened to me, I was drawn to a great rock which sucked me under. I managed to get away from this, too, and swam, I knew not where, until I came across a kind of a raft with a rough sail on it, and succeeded in getting upon it, but the waves dashed over and knocked me off several times, but I succeeded in getting back each time, until at last the raft lodged on a large rock and threw me clear over it. Then I had to strike out and swim again and eventually reached the shore about two and a half miles below the vessel. When they found me I was lying across some rocks stiff and helpless, but by good work I was brought to, and every one on the beach was very kind to me. When I was on the raft I tried to help one poor woman, whom I saw struggling in the sea in front of me, but I was helpless, I could not reach her and saw her go down into the waters." The one cry, young Smith says, when the disaster was known to those on board the ship was, "Save the women!" In one instance too many women were put into one boat and there were only four men in it to manage the boat. He saw one woman fall dead in the arms of one of the sailors. After Smith lost the raft he ran across a woman in the water, a Miss Rondebush, a singer of some prominence, whose life he succeeded in saving, and fetching her to the shore with him. Young Smith had his presence of mind with him and succeeded in saving his money and valuables, and has his passage ticket on the Mohican to New York City as a souvenir of the event.

Private J. M. Gregory, of Ashland, in a queer Spanish custom. He says: "The graveyard here in Manila is a very beautiful one, with a high stone wall all around it. In the center of the grounds is a large building of quaint architectural design, in which funeral services are held. There are stone walks all around and through the grounds, while the grass is very green and kept neatly trimmed, with flowers and shrubbery in profusion. The Spanish have what seems a queer way of burying their dead, for on the inside of the stone wall there are holes about three feet deep, one above the other. They are rented to the relatives of the deceased, and when buried the corpse is placed in one of these holes and sealed up. It remains there as long as the rent is paid, but on the failure to pay the remains are taken out and thrown into a bone pile, which is a large square place in the wall of the cemetery. There they are exposed to the weather and to the sight of all people who are curious enough to look at them, where they form a ghastly sight. The depositary from which the remains were taken, is then rented to someone else, and so on down the line. We did not bury our dead in that manner, however, but dug graves on the grassy lawn, and planted them in the good old United States way, with a head board of wood and a terra cotta foot mark, on which a number was cut for identification."

From New Zealand.
REERTON, New Zealand, Nov. 23, 1898.
I am very pleased to state that since I took the agency of Chamberlain's medicines the sale has been very large, more especially of the Cough Remedy. In two years I have sold more of this particular remedy than of all other makes for the previous five years. As to its efficacy, I have been informed by scores of persons of the good results they have received from it, and know its value from the use of it in my own household. It is so pleasant to take that we have to place the bottle beyond the reach of the children.

The Best Plaster.
A piece of flannel dampened with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bound on to the affected parts is superior to any plaster. When troubled with a pain in the chest or side, or a lame back, give it a trial. You are certain to be more than pleased with the prompt relief which it affords. Pain Balm is also a certain cure for rheumatism. For sale by S. Howorth & Co.

T. R. Manu, an Oregon soldier at Manila, who enlisted from Washington county, writes to his home paper, the Independent, saying: "I visited a sugar manufactory the other day and I will never eat any sugar or syrup that is made on these islands. Of course everything was done by hand and that makes everything dirtier. Chinese coolies, which were naked and sweat pouring off their bodies, were made to stand in a big tub of syrup to their knees and stamp it with all their might, and the sugar would go to the bottom and the syrup to the top. After it had been mixed up and properly stamped, it was thrown out by the hands and turned over to the refiners where it goes through various processes until finished."
