The Reporter's article regarding the editorial excursion last week did not please the clergy. It was the expression of the candid opinion of the editors. prompted by their own feelings in relation to the matter in question, rather than an attempt to represent any combination of citizens or the resolutions of any caucus. It displeased the ministers engineering the protest, who claim that many persons came to them with the statement that The Reporter placed them in the light of lying regarding the vote in the churches. To anyone who can Legal papers written and acknowledgements rightly interpret the English language, the fact is plain that we did no such thing. The petition sent to Portland specified the number of members voting in each church. The Reporter questioned the use of the word "members" instead of the more accurate expression of "persons present." It is a matter of surprise to us that Pastors Grannis and King would suppose that we had any desire to place them in the light of prevaricators, or that anyone should con-Oregon strue the statement that "an error was probably made," as equivalent to saying that "you lied about it." Such was not the motive, nor is the corclusion justified by the language used. This explanation is made on request of the ministers, whose sincerity we have never questioned, but whose generalship we have.
