Wednesday and Friday of last week, August 9th and 11th, will ever be memorable days in the history of McMinnville, as marking the return home of the volunteers enlisted from this county. A the Friday morning train arrived, over a thousand people were in waiting. The band played, the Manila Guards stood with drawn swords, the whistles blew, the bells rang and the dynamite roared in one grand concert of action. The welcomes that followed as the soldiers stepped from the train, are not to be described with words. A great burden was lifted from many a fond mother's heart, and she was prepared in that moment to take a new and more cheerful hold upon life. Some of the boys did not get home until Friday evening, when an equally large crowd of people assembled to welcome them. Paul Cooper, who was somewhat of a favorite in his company, being the youngest, and but 18 years old, was on this train, and the Manila Guards had conspired to give him an osculatory welcome that should make the other boys envious, and many of the girls were observed to make good their pledge.

In the selection of the following day for a public reception, the committees made a wise choice. The people were ripe for it, and dropped their work for a day. The weather was delightfully cool. The Dayton, Union (Newberg) and McMinnville bands furnished abundant music. Capt. H. S. Maloney on behalf of the veterans of all past wars, made the following entertaining address of welcome, the publication of which will be well received, along with the able address of Congressman Thos. H. Tongue, put in the preservable form in which the reader finds them, as many were unable to get within hearing distance of the speakers:

ADDRESS OF CAPT. MALONEY.

Veterans of the Spanish-American and Philippine wars:

In the name of the aged veterans of the Mexican war, who added many stars to our flag, and who are now too few and feeble to take an active part on this the proudest day that Yamhill county has ever seen; in the name of all the Indian war veterans, who, acting both as soldiers and pioneers have wrought more in uplifting our flag and civilization in the northwest, and received less recognition from the government than any soldiers who have ever fought its battles; in the name of the civil war veterans, who maintained our institutions unscathed through the greatest perils this nation has ever known, I greet you, and bid you welcome to a well-earned rest, amid the verdant fields and quiet shades of your boyhood home, where your peaceful slumbers will no longer be disturbed by the harsh sounds of battle. I also bid you welcome to the smiles and benedictions of our peerless Manila Guards, who have presided as your guardian angels during all the time your bosoms were bared to the storm of battle, and whose hearts thrilled with every heroic deed that flashed across the western sea. Your return brings vividly before us our experiences in the civil war, and we realize, as others cannot, the arduous services you have endured and sacrifices you have made. It was with pleasure that we beheld in your ranks the sons of our former foes, fighting side by side with you as comrades under the same flag, with not a single ancestral prejudice to mar the harmony of your comradeship. In retrospect we see again a flag presentation in this city, when war's first alarm was sounded; again we see our gallant volunteers, flushed with patriotic fervor, board the train on that April morning, which to some of your comrades was their last sight of home and loved ones. With feelings of comradeship, as well as closer ties, we followed you to Camp McKinley, where only those who were physically perfect were formally adopted by Uncle Sam. When you left us we thought your destination would be Cuba, but a little "May day picnic" by Comrade Dewey out in Manila bay quickly decided your field of action, and inaugurated a new policy for this nation. On the 25th of May you sailed out through the Golden Gate as the pioneers of our foreign service. For long weeks we heard nothing from the transports. Then came news of your royal reception at Honolulu, and again long weeks of suspense and anxiety, until the cable announced your arrival in Manila bay, together with your conquests on the way, thrilling our hearts with pride. Your quickly attained proficiency enabled you to give your state the enviable distinction in history of sending the first troops to foreign shores, and your gallant services have ever since kept the name of your state in the vanguard of heroic achievement. With our knowledge of military life we noted with pleasure that your commanding general thought you worthy of the post of honor, in selecting you to be the first troops to enter the walled city of Manila, and receive the surrender of the Spanish troops, and kept you on the most difficult provost duty that any soldiers were ever required to perform, until your own impatience to go to the firing line began to endanger the high order of discipline for which you had been noted. After you were sent to the front you made the name of Oregon conspicuous in history by your unsurpassed pluck and endurance and gallant achievements in the field. You have helped to give to this nation the proud distinction of being a nation upon whose domain the sun never sets, and given to us prestige over all other nations in the commerce of the western seas. You have added new lustre to the fame of the American volunteer. You have shown that he will fight equally well under all conditions, in all climates and against all kinds of enemies. Your terms of enlistment legally expired when the Spanish war was ended, but there being other foes in the field, you only passed long enough to replenish your haversacks and cartridge boxes, and went "at it again," and did not "let up" until you were on shipboard. It would have helped to nerve your arms in the struggle, if you could have seen the interested throngs on Third street, reading the daily, and sometimes hourly, bulletins, giving the news from Manila, and seen with what eagerness and throbbing heart each scanned the papers for news of battle and the list of killed and wounded. All honor to you who dared, and gave to chance the care and keeping of your lives, but especial honor to the gallant boys who yielded up their stainless young lives in the cause of human liberty. Love and sympathy for those they loved and left, and who can now only hear in happy dreams the footsteps of return. No one ever had a doubt that the "Oregons" would acquit themselves with credit upon every occasion, but you have surpassed our most enthusiastic expectations, and given our state such prominence in this war, that all may justly feel proud of Oregon. In the twilight of the nineteenth century, on almost opposite sides of the globe, we beheld two great headlights of American civilization: one of them in Manila bay, and the other at the entrance of Santiago harbor. You have linked Malabon and Oregon in imperishable history and song, and your manly conduct in San Francisco proves that you are gentlemen as well as soldiers. We, as veterans, are not jealous of the honors shown the returning volunteers, but rather believe that your gallant services, under such trying circumstances, has taught this generation what they owe the veterans of other wars. They cannot, as we do, realize the difference between the civil war and this, caused by the progress of the nations in all the arts of peace and war. When a battle was fought in the Philippines, 8,000 miles away, we had authentic information of the casualties within 24 hours, while in the civil war our friends had to wait long weeks, and sometimes months, before they knew the fate of loved ones, and the thousands of slabs marked "unknown" in our national cemeteries, indicate that there are yet waiting hearts for the boy who never came back. My mother had to await the casualties of both the north and the south before she knew the boys were safe. When we returned home there were too many of us to be feasted and banqueted. We had been in a "family row," and our Uncle Sam desired us to live together again as brothers, so we discarded our uniforms, and it was in the interest of peace and brotherly love we tried to forget that we had been at war. Not so with you. "We are all of us Yankees now." Not a single heart to-day but thrills with patriotic love at sight of that uniform, which like the blue has been endeared to us by consecrated blood. We note with pleasure the fact that not one of the Yamhill boys was discharged through official influence, but each remained to perform his full duty until the final muster out of the regiment, and we rejoice to see that the president has recommended that congress grant each one of you a medal of honor. You have earned even more than this, and we believe that a people who greeted you so royally from Ashland to Portland will see that you are paid the value of your militia uniforms which you were compelled to discard by the excessive heat in the tropics.

Your last foe was a stanger to civilized warfare, and used the flag of truce to accomplish his treacherous designs. Contrasting your foe with ours, in one of the border states, during the civil war, two lines of battle were approaching each other when the commander of the confederates saw a little girl and her kitten playing in the open field between the lines. He paused for an instant, then ordered a movement to the right, and the union commander, no less chivalrous, moved to the left, keeping pace with his antagonist, until the little girl and her kitten were out of range, when the battle began.

I see you have brought your bugler home with you. This brings to mind another war incident. At the muster out of a Missouri regiment, a Dutchman tried to hire the bugler to go home with him and sound the call for reveille at the usual hour every morning, and when the bugler told him that he thought he was tired of reveille, he replied: "O, no! I just want to hear you, so I can put my head out at the window and tell you 'to hell mit your reveille.'"

As a representative of those other boys who more than a generation ago felt much like you now feel, and looked much like you now look, I desire to give you some advice suggested by our experience. You are no doubt sick and tired of looking at your uniforms, but the time will come when you will prize them very highly. The past history of this country indicates that when peace is established in the Philippines it will be another generation who will fight our next battles. So take good care of your uniforms and trophies of war, and your letters, if you can get them from your girl before she marries the other fellow, who remained at home, as they will be interesting reading 30 years hence.

In the civil war Oregon did not have an opportunity to render such conspicuous service as you have rendered. Few men have attained distinction during the past generation, unless they either served in the civil war or got their start in Yamhill. You now return to civil life with a soldier's record equal to those in the civil war, length of service considered, and you also are from Yamhill. Your gallant service in the cause of civilization and humanity has better equipped you for the duties of citizenship. We trust that the many sacrifices and hardships which you have endured, and the wounds and scars which some of you bring back, will upon this and all proper occasions, give modesty a voice, and that you will, without any spirit of boastfulness, tell of your campaigns and battles, as they are of deep and thrilling interest to us now, but let me tell you that in our every-day life, we find that the veteran who holds down a dry goods box, and is always boasting of his army service is generally the one who rendered the least actual service. You are now veterans, and upon all future occasions we will gladly hail you as comrades whose ties of friendship have been welded in the fires of battle under the same starry flag.
