"I wish to express my thanks to the manufacturers of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea remedy, for having put on the market such a wonderful medicine," says W. W. After threshing his crop, Mr. T. D. Henderson made preparations last week to burn his straw before the rains fell upon it. Accordingly he and the boys applied the insidious match before they had called all the porkers into the corral. Just at that moment a band of swine of excellent lineage was busy saving the scattered grains of wheat, and did not notice the creeping flames until they were almost surrounded. Even then they were so eager for earthly treasures that they had no time to cast their eyes heavenward. "The flames rolled on, they would not go until they felt inclined." Finally the old manna hog felt the hot breath of the conflagration. Giving a loud "oof" she tried to get the pigs to a place of safety. But they, too badly scared to listen to reason, ran the other way, and the mother, breaking through the wall of fire, reached a cooler atmosphere with her life, but with a badly burned nose, and feet nearly useless. Not so with the seven pigs. When the straw was all burned and the "lorid glare" had ceased to play upon the scene Mr. Henderson found their poor bodies charred beyond recognition. He mourns their fate, and deeply feels their loss.

Hon. O. N. Denny "buidled better than he knew" when he introduced the gamey Denny pheasants into Yamhill county, for the noble birds afford recreation and amusement for thousands of people during the shooting season. Saturday evening's train from Portland had a special "sportsman's" car attached, and Sunday morning a special train came up from Portland filled with those who would hunt the pheasant in the quiet fields on the sluggish Yamhill. But, as a consequence of all this amusement and relaxation from business cares, the quiet of the Sabbath was disturbed, and the fusillade on every side caused the young veterans to brighten up in remembrance of the fields in far-away Luzon, where the "niggers" used to hunt them on Sunday.

On the 10th of December, 1897, Rev. S. A. Donahoe, pastor M. E. church, South, Pt. Pleasant, W. Va., contracted a severe cold which was attended from the beginning by violent coughing. Home-grown melons have been in the market for some time, and while they are nearly all of good quality, once in a great while one will be found not quite ripe. For the protection of customers, the accommodating dealers have been in the habit of "plugging" the fruit before it was sold, and if faulty ones were found they were laid aside to be hauled to the garbage pile. Lately the small boys espied a lot of these melons outside after closing hours, and, watching their opportunity, stealthily transported them to the classic canyons of Cozine creek, or other secluded spot, and prepared for a feast. Green melons, however, were not relished, and the boys know now that the grocers had not forgotten the melons left outside at the closing hour.
