Yours Truly,

H. C. BURNS.

HAS COME AND GONE.

A Large Crowd to Hear Bryan on April 4th.

Agreeable to program, Col. Wm. J. Bryan arrived on a special train at 9:45 Wednesday morning, and was driven at once to the Cook school house square, where a platform had been erected for the speaker. He was in charge of H. C. Burns, Yamhill's democratic central committeeman who is opposed to fusion, who was piloted and aided by a body-guard of a dozen or more of the untrifled. The crowd was large, variously estimated at 4,000 to 6,000. Mr. Burns introduced the Colonel in a few happy words, and with a personality that did not suffer in the least by comparison with those about him. Others occupying places on the platform were Mayor Maloney, C. W. Talmage, Rev. Lindsey, Hon. J. H. Townsend, of Dallas, Mr. Shade Richardson and two reporters from Portland.

Mr. Bryan said he had come to talk to republicans; to those who were against him in 1896; to people who are all wrong; even though it was a tax on his strength. He believed republicans were open to conviction, and many were willing to change their views on a moment's notice if their leaders told them to. He told the "I like it" story, known to be over 30 years old, about the beef being "tough, but I like it." This was the cue on the winding up of almost every argument. He said the democrats had voted for the income tax and the republicans against it; he charged them with favoring the greenback when Lincoln signed the bill which was the salvation of the nation, and now they are trying to tear the greenback; "it's tough, but you have to say you like it." He charged them with passing a bill providing for national bank currency resting on national bonds; and that while ostensibly they had favored international bimetalism, they never were sincere in their desire for it. The democrats, on the other hand, were still for 16 to 1, "without the aid or consent of any other nation on earth."

On the subject of trusts, he said republicans saw and denounced them, but more have been organized in the last few years than in the whole history of the country. His proposed remedy for this was to take all the water out of the stock of corporations, and demanding them to take out a license in the state in which they operate, on evidence showing that the stock was not watered, and limiting the per cent of business they might do within that territory, naming for example 98 per cent on sugar and 90 per cent on wire. This would create quite a flood for a time, but he believed it would abolish the trusts. He made a slap at Whitney, who failed to come over to the Bryan leadership. The populists left the republican party, also the silver republicans, and even some of the democrats, all the time rendering the republican party less able to reform itself, until it had become the home of refuge of all the magnates. This was illustrated by the Irishman and his mule. The mule had got his foot over the dashboard, and the Irishman declared "if you get in, I'll get out." He referred to the low price of wheat, the tariff on sacks, twine and wire, and the increase in the price of stoves, as arguments in favor of voting for Bryan next fall. He denounced the revenue stamp tax as unjust. On the question of expansion he found the least response, and the enthusiasm was very slight at any time. He talked solely on the assumption that the government would take an imperialistic attitude on the Philippine question, and by inference lead his hearers to think that there had been no exigency of war which had brought upon the country a hard problem to solve, and which will doubtless be solved in the best way by a conscientious government. Some of the soldier boys were heard to remark that too much good blood had been spilled on Philippine soil to allow to go unclaimed what the exigencies of war had brought to us. Mr. Bryan came far from striking a popular chord with his anti-expansion theory, and many a man who voted for him in 1896 can never endorse this part of his platform.

The speech was just one hour in length. Personally, Mr. Bryan has deteriorated since his last visit to Oregon. He is worn out with too much speaking, and cares less than formerly about a trim personal appearance. His best friends concede that he is capable of a much more captivating speech, when at himself, and this comports with the ideals people had set up for him. The train was taken at once after the speech for Hillsboro.

A ROUSING MEETING.

Citizens of Newberg Anxious for the Beet Sugar Factory.

Residents of Newberg and vicinity to the number of about 500 were present at the called meeting last Monday, for the further consideration of the beet sugar factory at that place.

The meeting was called to order by Hon. Jesse Edwards, president of the new beet sugar organization, who stated that an address by Dr. Korn, of Dayton, Ohio, who is the representative of the syndicate negotiating with the Newberg people for the factory, had been expected by mail to be read at the meeting, but had failed to come. An interesting program, however, was substituted. Mr. Edwards himself gave the meeting some valuable information concerning beet culture for sugar, and showed the progress of the industry in this country from its inception. In 1896 there were six factories in America, 16 in 1898 and 30 in 1899. Germany, with a territory little larger than Oregon repeated by half, has 450 factories. The sugar product from both cane and beets in the United States last year was 50,000 tons, while the consumption of sugar in the country amounted to over two million tons. Hence it is an easy matter to see that the ratio of consumption will keep pace with the increase of product, and there is no possible danger of overproduction.

Mr. Edwards was followed by Hon. Clarence Butt in a stirring speech setting forth the profits in raising beets as shown from various reports, the census being that the net profit from beets was about $25 per acre; while that from wheat was about $4.

Wm. Manning was called out for a talk, and opened by saying that he had figured on wheat raising, and found that it cost him 47½¢ to raise it, and he had sold his crop for 52½¢. He grew eloquent in giving the history of his former town in Virginia, which from a sleepy village had reached a pay-roll of hundreds of thousands of dollars by the citizens giving encouragement to numerous enterprises. The talk was to the point, without any surplusage, and awakened great enthusiasm in the meeting. Mr. Heston read a paper on the proper cultivation of beets, after which the meeting adjourned for dinner.

In the afternoon Rev. Craven gave a talk on what he desired to see in the matter, and predicted a motor line connecting Newberg with towns up the valley within five years, which would greatly add to transportation facilities.

J. G. Eckman was called to speak on the relations between McMinnville and Newberg, and took the opportunity to answer a few good-natured slurs made by former speakers about Newberg taking McMinnville in as a suburb when she gets her factory.

Mr. Chas. Grissen was the slated speaker for the occasion, and right well he held the attention of the large crowd for over an hour, relating what he had seen in beet sugar manufacture both in California and on the occasion of his visit to Germany. He sought to impress particularly the point that citizens should be free from the selfishness that leads one man to place obstacles in the way of another who has the opportunity to make an honest dollar, and the further point that now is the accepted time to break away from unprofitable wheat raising and seize the opportunity for new industries. The advantages of soil, water and fuel possessed by Newberg and the whole valley were dwelt upon. Mr. George C. Sears followed with a very sensible and encouraging talk to his neighbors, and pledged 100 acres of land devoted to beets for five years.

The proposition of the factory builders is this: Pledge them the product of 5,000 acres of beets for five years, and 50 acres of land for a building site. For the beets they will pay $1 per ton on 12 per cent parity, and 25 cents additional per ton on each per cent of increase in purity.

The meeting then proceeded to take subscriptions of acreage, and 489 acres were pledged, being an average of 6 acres to the farmer. This, with former pledges, made a total of nearly 1,000 acres. For the remainder a systematic canvass of outlying territory is to be made, and this community as well as others will be asked to pledge acreage.

Other meetings are soon to follow.

Life of Hop-Poles.

All hop-growers realize the time, labor and money expended in the frequent renewing of poles. The wish is frequently expressed that some preparation could be discovered to save this triple expenditure. Such a discovery has been made in Carbolineum Avenarius.

This is an oily compound for the preservation of wood. It can be easily applied to green or dry wood and will preserve either, without deterioration, for an infinite period. Discovered in Germany over 25 years ago, it is successfully used today all over the world for railroad sleepers, pavements, bridges, ship timbers and hundreds of other purposes. Absolutely effectual in preserving timber under such severe usage as this, its protective value for hop-poles, exposed simply to air and soil, can be readily perceived. A single treatment will insure them against decay, dry rot and vermin (the latter injurious to vine and pole alike) for ten years and render sharpening unnecessary for at least five. This can be safely guaranteed from successful results obtained in treating telegraph poles, in varying climates, subjected to almost identical exposure. In these cases Carbolineum Avenarius has always stood the test.

When such facts as these are presented to the hop grower, arguments in favor of using the preventive would seem little needed. Additionally, the cost of the article is light and it can be cheaply applied by any person. This is done with the brush or, better still, by dipping the poles into the liquid. Purchasers should notice carefully that the full name "Carbolineum Avenarius" appears on every package, as spurious imitations are offered by unscrupulous persons under the name Carbolineum and other titles, calculated to deceive the unwary. These are as worthless as the genuine article is valuable. For further information apply to O. O. Hodson, McMinnville, Or.

Kelton Peery, of the 8th grade, had the misfortune to fall from the rings and strain one of his ankles quite severely one day last week.

There were quite a number of visitors at our school Wednesday afternoon. Those that we found out the names of were Misses Alma Jellison, Estella Kinman, and Miss Mulligan and some other young lady of Amity, and Mr. Wallace and Mr. Weed, '99, of McMinnville.

NEWBERG.

Newberg is very lively these days.

A large number of the citizens in and about town will hear W. J. Bryan.

Tuesday last Miss Lou Dillon returned from a stay of a few weeks at Astoria.

Mrs. C. F. Johnson announced her millinery opening for the seventh of April.

M. F. Hamilton, the popular merchant, was in Portland a few days last week preparing for a trip to Cape Nome.

T. H. Gardiner is at his home near town for his yearly visit. He is employed on an Eastern railroad, and hails with delight his visit with his family.

J. L. Hoskins and J. G. Hadley, both being candidates for the office of recorder, decided to lay their names before the primary meeting on Saturday last, and let it be decided by vote which should have his name go before the county convention. Mr. Hoskins won by a few votes.

The meeting called for April 2nd to discuss the beet sugar industry was well attended and much interest was manifested, although not nearly enough acreage was set forth for the raising of the beets. The farmers will respond no doubt more liberally soon, if they realize more about it.

Remarkable Cure of Rheumatism.

KENNA, Jackson Co., W. Va.

About three years ago my wife had an attack of rheumatism which confined her to her bed for over a month and rendered her unable to walk a step without assistance, her limbs being swollen to double their normal size. Mr. S. Maddox insisted on my using Chamberlain's Pain Balm. I purchased a fifty-cent bottle and used it according to the directions and the next morning she walked to breakfast without assistance in any manner, and she has not had a similar attack since.—A. B. PARSONS. For sale by Howorth & Co., druggists.

In almost every neighborhood there is some one whose life has been saved by Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, or who has been cured of chronic diarrhoea by the use of that medicine. Such persons make a point of telling of it whenever opportunity offers, hoping that it may be the means of saving other lives. For sale by Howorth & Co., druggists.

Christian Church Announcement.

He who studies books alone will know how things ought to be, and he who studies men will know how things are. There is a great difference between an idealist and an idle dreamer. One reason why the world grows no better is because each one is trying to convert his neighbor and neglects himself. Mean souls like mean pictures, are sometimes found in large, good-looking frames. That's right, we enjoyed your audience last Lord's day. We shall expect you again next Lord's day. The following are the subjects to be discussed: Morning—"That peculiar power through which we become the sons of God." Evening subject—"A great city converted through the preaching of one man." We appreciated your most excellent solo, Mr. Grissen, and hope to have you again soon. We hope to have the Rowland quartet of brass as soon as they are able to play. Our choir is getting better all the time.

The Best In The World.

We believe Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the best in the world. A few weeks ago we suffered with a severe cold and a troublesome cough, and having read their advertisements in our own and other papers we purchased a bottle to see if it would effect us. It cured us before the bottle was more than half used. It is the best medicine out for colds and coughs.—The Herald, Andersonville, Ind. For sale by Howorth & Co., druggists.
