Editor Reporter: Your little pleasantry at my expense, because I am a member of so many conventions of different names, entitles me to a little space for a reply, especially if I will be pieasant about it. I will try to be. There is no difference in the platforms or the principles of the Bryan democrats, populists and silver republicans. Some are tenacious for name, and party managers think it best to keep up all of these political organizations to please those who cling to the name. The principles are sufficient for me, and I will work wherever invited, if principles are correct. Some people shift their principles and opinions. Even those in high places are sometimes great "floppers" in this line. But I will not call names for fear of going to the waste basket. However, I will venture to mention Admiral Dewey, as you mentioned him. I can only account for his change in the fact that he was said to be a republican when the civil war was over, and until he went to sea last; when that party was grand and glorious and had the respect of the good American people, but he was from home a long time, and when he returned and found parties and principles so different from what they were when he left, he felt it to be his patriotic duty to declare himself a democrat.
