

Harvest Hands Wanted.

Harvest is at hand and I want 5000 men, women and children to come to my store and buy their supplies for harvesting and hop picking. I am selling men's shirts, gloves, shoes, etc., ladies' wrappers, waists, hosiery, gloves, etc. cheaper than such goods have ever been sold in Yamhill county. We are very busy now preparing to fill our contracts to supply several threshing outfits. My grocery department has assumed much greater proportions than I had any idea it would in the short time since I added that department, which simply means that I carry the right goods and sell at the right prices. There are a few of those lace curtain samples left that I advertised last week.

R. E. Smith, the milkman, met with a painful fall Saturday evening. Work is going on at a lively rate at the new Chehalum Valley mills, in preparation for receiving the mill machinery which is expected most any time now. Work will also be commenced at once upon the engine house to be located immediately in front of the mill. A. P. Johnson and the Hagey boys had a complete new threshing outfit shipped up from Portland this week, manufactured by the Advance company of Battle Creek, Michigan. The separator is furnished with the latest appliances and is a model in every particular. The engine is a whopper, weighing about eight tons. The owners claim that in a good, steady day's run they can thresh three thousand bushels of grain. The David boys on Chehalum mountain have been looking into the dairying proposition for some time, and having come to the conclusion that their farm is well calculated for supporting that industry, intend to begin operations accordingly this fall. It is their intention to purchase at first ten or fifteen good cows, and if the trial seems a success they will gradually branch out on a larger scale, as they become familiar with the business. They believe their farm is capable of supporting seventy-five to one hundred cows. Graphic.

THE ORIGIN OF PETROLEUM.

Scientists Not Altogether Agreed On The Subject.

By the discovery of large quantities of petroleum in California and Texas within the last few months the question is again raised how such accumulations in the earth originated. Oil is sometimes found very near the coal deposits, and it is somewhat akin to coal in composition. Hence it has been inferred that it had a vegetable origin. No doubt is entertained as to the nature of coal. This is universally attributed by experts to wonderfully luxuriant vegetation of bygone ages, when the atmosphere was hotter and damper than now and contained more carbonic acid. Then, too, in Russia, the oil contains such substances as benzole, or carbonic acid, a product of coal tar.

Another theory which is entertained is that the oil came from animal remains stored away in the earth. There is plenty of evidence, from fossils, that quantities of fish lived in the shallow seas that once covered parts of the American continent, though one only finds their bones, not the flesh. And it is well known that some species of fish which are exceedingly abundant today contain a good deal of oil. The menhaden fishery is conducted largely for the purpose of obtaining this substance. It is asserted that as long ago as 1888 a product very much like kerosene was derived by Engler from menhaden oil by distillation. The Washington correspondent of the Baltimore Sun remarks:

"Sixty per cent of the stuff consisted of saturated hydrocarbons, from which Engler isolated and identified a number of oils usually contained in the products of certain oil fields. He also purified the product and made good kerosene oil. Not satisfied with this he went further, and showed that other fats, such as olein, will yield petroleum, so that fish oils are not essential. Ordinary fats, through simple heating, break up so that the oxygen unites with part of the hydrogen to form water, leaving the carbon and part of the hydrogen in about the proportion to form paraffine oils. Considering the ease with which petroleum oils can be obtained from fats and the plentiful supply of such fats in the animal remains, of which there is evidence in many oil rocks, it is not surprising the opinion has gained ground favoring the animal source of the limestone oils of Ohio, Indiana and Canada."

The composition of petroleum in one country differs from that in another. Indeed, the oils of California and Texas are somewhat unlike those of Ohio, which, again, are not the same as those of Pennsylvania. Crude oil is really a combination of several kinds of light and heavy oils in varying proportions, and in certain localities there is an admixture of sulphur. The Pennsylvania oil yields the highest percentage of naphtha and kerosene, while the Texas oil, or most of it, is fit only for fuel. The authority above quoted adds:

"The theory has been advanced that the petroleum of Pennsylvania owe their origin to the effect of heat upon the underlying limestones and shales of the Silurian age. It is claimed that the same force which caused the Appalachian chain to uplift, passing through the limestones and shales of the Silurian age at a modified temperature, distilled the oil already contained in these shales and conglomerates sands of the Devonian age, where it was condensed and filtered and found its home in the open, porous conglomerates which characterize the Catskill, Portage and Chemung periods of the Devonian age."

Limestone contains a good deal of carbonic acid in combination with lime. A chemist named Bethel has advanced the idea that at a red heat this acid would be freed and unite with water to form hydrocarbons. It will thus be seen that the real source of petroleum is still far from being generally recognized.

A Minister's Good Work.

"I had a severe attack of bilious colic, got a bottle of Chamberlain's colic, cholera and diarrhoea remedy, took two doses and was entirely cured," says Rev. A. A. Power, of Emporia, Kan. "My neighbor across the street was sick for over a week, had two or three bottles of medicine from the doctor. He used them for three or four days without relief, then called in another doctor who treated him for some days and gave him no relief, so discharged him. I went over to see him the next morning. He said his bowels were in a terrible fix, that they had been running off so long that it was almost bloody flux. I asked him if he had tried Chamberlain's colic, cholera and diarrhoea remedy, and he said, 'No.' I went home and brought him my bottle and gave him one dose, told him to take another dose in fifteen or twenty minutes if he did not find relief, but he took no more and was entirely cured."
