Newberg. Up in Whatcom, Wash., a week ago they struck oil. From Whatcom south through Washington and Oregon to the California line at least twelve companies are preparing to drill, and you can trace these companies from Whatcom south in a direct line. There is no connection whatever between these companies. Each has been promoted and work has been inaugurated independent of the other, but the prospect, the incentive for action, and the probability of success is in each case laid on the same foundation based on theory if you like, but a theory that has the support of the best geological knowledge. Geologists have always contended that the oil belt was continuous through California, Oregon and Washington. Uutil this strike at Whatcom no oil was ever found north of California. This find at Whatcom makes our work a practical enterprise. Theory is knocked into a cocked hat, as it were. It is certainly practical and not theoretical at Whatcom. While we have had perfect confidence that development work would prove the existence of oil, we think and be-lieve that the discovery of oil at Whatcom clinches the matter. It endorses our claims, it proves that oil exists in the northwest, it wipes out that old question of distance. We now have oil north as well as south of us. We are betwixt and between, and if the court knows herself, and we think she does, we will strike oil. Every dollar you put into this stock will go to direct work of development. There is no liability beyond the amount you purchase and pay for. We need your help now and respectfully
