McMinnville, Oregon, - Sept. 9, 1886

It is easy to say enough good things about Oregon, its climate, productions etc., without drawing upon the imagination for statements. So when we hear an immigrant, a woman who has come hundreds of miles to make her home in this state, inquire if bean and tomato vines stand out during our winters without being hurt by frost, we feel that a very useless falsehood has paved the way for discontent for her in her new home. A negative reply brought a look of incredulity and surprise to her face, and she answered, evidently loath to give up the idea, that an immigration agent had told her that "he himself had a thrifty tomato vine three years old in his garden where it had grown and borne fruit continuously for that time." What a lie. Who was he?

A New Daily.

D. C. Ireland & Co., of the McMinnville Reporter, have just commenced the publication of a daily. Volume I, No. 1, of the Daily Reporter, bearing date of Wednesday, September 1st. It is a spruce-looking twelve-column sheet, and presents a very neat typographical appearance. Telegram.

It is a neatly printed 12-column folio, and will doubtless grow with the town. Albany Herald.

It is a neat, newsy and well gotten up, and we wish them the best of success. Yaquina Post.

The Silverton appeals to the lawmakers for the protection of farmers against the Mongolian pheasants, as a flock of these gormands is worse than a drove of hogs in a field of grain.
