The Return of Love.

Love's dwelling place is in thy heart,
Where e'er his footsteps restless roam;
How wide his fancies stray apart,
At eventide he will come home.
The noonday sun may hotly scorch
And cruel tasks him overcome,
Still fond he seeks the festival morn,
At eventide he will come home.
Still sweep and dust with tender care
The chamber, though he long may roam—
Let not unworship enter there,
At eventide he will come home.
Be sure of this, though all beside
May fall while still fond love will roam,
To his own house and inside,
At eventide he will come home.

In spite of all partial repair St. Mark's cathedral (Venice) is slowly sinking into the mud of the lagoons, the tide ebbs and flows up under the great dome. Nothing can stop this but the sinking around the entire church of a solid wall to keep out the salt water, within which the foundations may be made stable; or the inner face of the foundations must be laid bare and the entire area of the church must be excavated and similarly treated, after which the floor level may be restored and the pavement, with its invaluable decorative designs rescued from the destruction it is now undergoing.

A Kingston, New York man, writes to the post office department for protection: "I saw advertisement in the New York World from a man who offered to sell me make a fortune if I would send him 25 cents. I wanted a fortune, so I sent him the quarter, and I got this slip of paper next day." (The slip reads: "How to make a fortune: Work hard, don't smoke, don't drink, don't marry, be saving.") "Now Mr. Postmaster General, don't you think it is a shame to beat a poor man out of his money this way, and can't you stop this swindling through the mails?"

Sometime ago Miss Hester Crawford Dorsey, a lady well known in literary circles, composed a poem under the title of "Dethroned," which recited the story of Maximilian and Carlotta. This poem was dedicated to Emperor Francis Joseph, of Austria. The dedication has been accepted by his majesty in a complimentary letter just received by Miss Dorsey. The Baltimore American says in this connection: "The success of Americans in winning favor from royalty seems to be greater than ever this season. First it was Mrs. Mackey, the California millionaire; then Mrs. James Brown Postor, and the baritone, Eugene Oudin, of New York, and now a Baltimorean, Miss Dorsey."
