Oregon has fallen heir to some of the pests of Minnesota by the completion of the NPR. W. J. Garrison, Jr. informs us that the dog-fly, and the green head are numerous in portions of eastern Oregon now, and have been met with at East Portland by horsemen. They came through in stock cars.

We are informed that a horse afflicted with chronic nasal gleet, a very dangerous and incurable disease, has subjected over a hundred head to it in the lower end of this county the past few months, and a hotly contested law suit will result at Lafayette this week. If reports are true $10,000 will not repair injuries from this one animal passed from man to man in trades.

Vol. 1 No. 1. of Kane's Illustrated West has reached our table. It is well filled with engravings and biographical sketches of the leading men of Portland, and the prominent residences of the wealthy class. The illustrations are fair to average. The journalistic arena is open to all who have money, and can laugh at Dame Fortune, with nothing to inspire. The Illustrated West is welcome.

William Peek was taken to the penitentiary yesterday to serve out his sentence of five years. Peek wanted to be taken to the train in a hack, saying it was a shame for a man who had been in the society he had to go through the streets handcuffed. Had his request been granted he would probably have wanted his swallow tail coat and kid gloves. He went along all the same, and the cut of his clothes will not bother him much for a season.

Some of the papers are discussing the practicability of reforming Geronimo. The fact that he plays poker seems to indicate the existence of a vein in his nature which might be made available in redeeming the Apache brave. But we rather lean to the idea of sending him and his fellow-savages to Fort Jefferson, Florida, the St. Helena of the United States. It is situated seventy miles from Key West, about half way between Florida and Cuba, and is said to be about the first place that yellow fever visits when it starts out on its destroying path.

Next Sabbath is to be observed at the Baptist church as College day. The practice of observing such a day has been observed for the last few years and we wish to keep it up for the general interest of the public. It is hard to estimate the value of such an institution to a town or community, and any interest taken in such work is not labor lost. Rev. E. C. Anderson, D. D. will address the people at 11 a. m., and Prof. Crawford, A. M., will address them at 7:30 p. m. All the friends of education and of the college especially are invited. All will be welcome at these services. G. J. Burchett.

The Salem Statesman in its special from Roseburg concerning the suicide of W. F. Owens, has this to say as regards the failure: It is thought the deed was done in a moment of temporary derangement. His wife is visiting in Yakima, Washington territory, and he will probably not be buried until her return. He was aged forty-one; raised in Oregon; well respected and his death is seriously regretted. This failure will involve a number of Douglas county citizens. Noah Cornutt, a merchant and large farmer, of Riddle, has failed. He was security for Owens for a large sum. Bob Phipps, a large farmer near Roseburg, is on notes with Owens for many thousands of dollars. Owens owed the Hans Weaver estate, near Myrtle, $10,000. He owed the Douglas county bank some $13,000, and large sums to George Jones, large farmer, to Caro Bros., Marks & Co., and A. S. Hamilton, merchants of Roseburg, besides large sums to various other parties. The immediate difficulty was occasioned by the demand upon him for $10,000 for the Hans Weaver estate, and a large sum advanced to him by Chicago parties to buy wool. He had bought immense quantities of wheat and wool. He would no doubt have pulled through had he been given a fair show. His failure is for at least $130,000. He leaves a wife and three children, a young man and two grown daughters. He served one term as state senator from Douglas county in 1874.
