McMinnville, Or. - Dec. 28, 1886

Hon. John A. Logan, the great warrior statesman closed his earthly career in Washington Sunday afternoon. His death is a shock to his immediate friends and a sorrowful surprise to the nation.

The Jacksonville Sentinel is to be continued under the proprietorship of Mrs. Krause, widow of the late editor. Being conversant with the business, there is no reason why she should not succeed, unless "probate confiscation" overtakes her.

In a suit under the Keady liquor law, on appeal from Clatsop, it is claimed that a fatal error has been discovered in the passage of the law. The journals show that the senate amendment to the house bill provided the sale of liquors in less quantities than a quart while the house journal fixes the quantity at a gallon. It is singular that this error had not been discovered long before this.

The Rural Spirit is putting in its best lick for a scabby sheep law, and the Farmer is distributing Dolph's tobacco and beet sugar seed to "subscribers preferred." As the Rural Spirit says: The time has come when no one gets anything unless he asks for it. The sheep-growing interest is too big to be overlooked, and if those who are directly engaged will put what they want in the shape of a demand the assembly will not deny it.

Ministers of Roseburg have dropped their belligerent style of dealing with saloon keepers, and last week issued an invitation to them to close their places of business and attend union gospel service at 2:30 on Sunday. The result has not been chronicled, but it is likely that it will be at least as beneficial as if they had adopted the usual denunciatory style, spoke of saloons as "rum holes" instead of "places of business," and the proprietors thereof as venders of "liquid damnation" instead of "saloon keepers." Vinegar never catches flies.

The rambling reporter of the Columbia Chronicle fell in with the McGibens, in traveling a few days ago, and in giving his impression of the old fashioned family, he announced it the safe and proper thing to say that the good looks of the entire band was an inheritance from the mother, and added: "She, notwithstanding the wear and tear incident to bringing up so large a family, is a handsome and a remarkably well preserved lady.

She looks as though, with proper encouragement, she could enlarge the family to at least twenty-five."

And now a woman has mysteriously disappeared from Portland. Her name is Ida M. Garrard; she was dressed in red and wore a black jacket and black knit cap trimmed with red and black tassels. She was of medium height, about 20 years old, full round face, jet black hair, banged, and brown eyes. She wrote with her left hand. She came into town to buy Christmas presents for her four children, and as she had not returned that night Mr. G. came in next day and though he made diligent search and inquiry, he could elicit no information concerning her whereabouts. Mr. Garrard stands well at Columbia slough, is a hard working, industrious man, and this is a sad misfortune to be thus left on the eve of Christmas with his four children.

The Telegram prints a moral to a tale thus: The story of old miser Paine, recently told before a New York court, should bear its Christmas moral. Here was a miserable creature who dragged himself through life like a social leper, grabbing, scrimping, and living on husks, like the prodigal, that his relatives and friends might quarrel over his wallet and the lawyers made big fees. If there is walking the streets of Portland to-day a miser of the Paine stamp let him read and learn. If he would taste a happiness which he has never known let him seek out the first deserving case he can find and give. If he would save himself from living an eternal perdition, now is his chance. Tears of gratitude would be to him more precious drops than all his gold.

Corvallis papers are full of reports concerning the seduction and abduction of a girl by a couple of drummers who are a disgrace to their profession, representing respectfully the houses of Hegele, Crowell & Co. and Zan Bros. The Chronicle says the affair has created great excitement. The young lady's father and relatives are greatly exercised over the matter, and if they succeed in getting their hands on either Donovan or Friedman, it will go hard with them. Donovan, it is said, was recently involved in a similar escapade in McMinnville, while Friedman is well known as the fellow of mashing proclivities. The firms who employ these scoundrels should discharge them at once. No respectable house can afford to be represented by such fellows. The end of this matter is not yet. The friends of this young lady are making every exertion to bring her seducers to punishment. The affair is likely to have a tragic ending."
