McMinnville, Or. - Dec. 29, 1886

George M. Pullman was lately asked whether he did not think the railway carriages so numerous built for the general public by his workmen, unnecessarily elegant and rich. "I consider such cars educative to the masses," was the reply. "To many a man or woman it is a look at comfort and luxury that is their ideal. They dress themselves better to travel, behave more courteously in a handsome vehicle than a tasteless and cheap one."

The Salvation Army prospers simply because religious denominations imagine that good comes from it. The practical benefits will not stand the test. The way they work a town is in part explained by the Salem Statesman: Two of them yesterday, went up and down the streets, demanding a dollar for the Lord in an imperative way, and intimating that it was the duty of every one to give them a dollar for the Lord. But, from strong indications, it's mighty little of the money these fellows receive that the Lord will ever get any benefit of. Their religion is used as a pretext for begging money, and when they get it they divide it up among themselves. These fellows intend to return to Portland, Friday, and next week, a whole gang will come up. They say that a brass band will accompany the expedition, and that Salem will be taken by storm. They ought not to be encouraged.

Discussing the mongolian pheasant F. S. Matterson, in the Farmer states a fact. The birds in question are not only of no earthly use to the people of Oregon, but fast becoming an unmitigated nuisance to the farmer. They were brought here simply as a game bird and at the instance of a few city sportsmen. The assembly has undertaken to compel the farmers to raise them, under heavy penalties of fine and imprisonment. What for? That city men may shoot them; that is all there is to it. If there is more, perhaps the Oregonian will enlighten us. Perhaps, also, this leading journal will tell us by what rule of right or justice the birds were brought here let loose upon farmers, and they be threatened with arrest and punishment for killing birds they raised on their own land. Could the sportsmen with the same propriety introduce the red fox as a game animal, and compel the farmers to raise him for them to chase? Why not?

A Live Merchant.

Some six or eight months ago, Capt. E. B. Fellows bought out the furniture and undertaking establishment of D. C. Narver. It was thought at the time that the new proprietor would add new life to the business and materially increased the business prosperity of the city. The public have not been mistaken. Capt. Fellows immediately began to add a large and choice assortment of fine furniture. As the business began to increase in volume, a new front was added to the main store, making it at once the most attractive place of business in the city. For many years the public have had to put up with whatever facilities offered for the burial of the dead. Mr. Fellows at once, with his usual foresight and energy, opened out a correspondence with an eastern house, and the result to-day is a handsome plate-glass hearse comparing favorably with any city on the Pacific coast. The undertaking department is constantly in receipt of handsome burial cases. With the increase of business that has been justly merited by this energetic man, Mr. Fellows has found the present establishment far too small for his business, and has been forced to lease another building in which his numerous employes are constantly at work upon large invoices of handsome furniture. Mr. Fellows will continue to dispose of his goods at prices that can't be beat.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Amity.

Amity is aglow with life and fun. The young folks had two parties last night, i. e., a dance at the Agricultural hall, and a social gathering at Mrs. Delashmond's. Both were well attended and enjoyed, so we learn.

So many turkeys are being cooked that one would imagine fowl would be scarce in future, in consequence of the Christmas dinners. We are kindly invited to dine with our esteemed friend Mrs. Bunting.

Quite a number of our young folks are quitting the world of single blessedness but so quietly do they step of the stage that we scarce have time to say good-bye. Our school now numbers 79 and is becoming very pleasant interesting and we hope, profitable to all who attend.

We are much interested in the expected New Year edition of the Reporter. Hope it will be liberally supported. E.S.L.

Senator Logan's funeral will be held in the senate chamber upon the reassembly of congress.
