far along in the meridian of life.

Many of them, like Henry and Sarah Baker and Margaret Mahone and Blakely Newby, have gone to join the great majority on the other shore.

The second building in town was bought of T. J. Shadden I think, by "Dutch Bearry," and on large wooden wheels was drawn into town by several yokes of oxen, and used as a store and dwelling by Solomon Bearry, and which perhaps still stands as it was first placed, to the west, and adjoining my half block.

The next summer, in 1856 or '57, Gov. Geo. L. Woods erected a small house just west of the corner of the college lot, and hung out his shingle as "Atty at law." I also erected a good sized house on the southeast corner of my lots, which was soon occupied by Dr. J. McBride and his family.

I also erected a house on the N. E. corner of my property in which I opened a "store" of assorted merchandise from a large stock of drugs, books, ladies and gent's goods of every description, down to chain pumps and grind stones.

Before building and opening the store however, I built a house on the corner directly east of the store, which was soon occupied by W. S. Hussey, Esq., and in which occurred one of the saddest and most distressing scenes I ever witnessed. But enough for the present. If further rambling reminiscence of the early days of McMinnville are desired, I will cheerfully transcribe them from the tablets of indelible memory.

With kindly hail to all the "first settlers" I am quionasum kahqua ancotta. S. S. ADAMS. Marysville, Ohio, Dec. 31st, 1886.

Who is the modest editor of the Detroit Tribune? He should be stuffed and mounted on a lofty pedestal, as an example to the rising generation. Here is a specimen of his retiring meekness: "If we only knew what kind of brain food Mr. Tennyson uses we'd—we'd get the other kind."
