Cleveland's "Bloody Shirt."

Nor could President Cleveland have hit upon a readier or more effective way to increase his popularity in the southern states than by his order to return the captured battle-flags.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

The flag episode will make very doubtful southern states solid for Cleveland in 1888—a "solid south" will again support Cleveland in 1888.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Milwaukee Sentinel quotes these expressions, and says: Who raised the battle-flag question, and why? These flags have rested quietly in the hands of the government for more than a quarter of a century—the south did not ask for them and the north never mentioned them. Peace was between the sections. Not a voice in all the north was raised in mention of the war. The war was over; Grand Army men arraigned for handshaking and picnics with southern men. Three or four southern states had become doubtful in politics—the era of peace had come and having no longer the pressure of war feelings to keep them together, several southern states threatened to secede from the democratic ranks.

In the midst of this condition of things, Mr. Cleveland ordered the return of the captured battle-flags to "the Confederate states." He had no authority in law to do anything of the kind. He did it to "lead in the pleasant way of peace." Nobody was out of the pleasant ways of peace. Mr. Cleveland was not one of "those who fought" and therefore had no warrant to act for those who did. There had been no question of his utter forgiveness of the south. He did not consult Gen. Sheridan the head of the army, or Gen. Sherman, or any one of those who had fought.

What could any reasonable man think but that Mr. Cleveland had used these sacred relics to "increase his popularity in the southern states," to "make every doubtful southern state solid for Cleveland in 1888," as the southern journals say he has done?

Who, then, "traffics in sectional hate?"

In an interview on political matters, Gen. Ben. F. Butler, says: "I think that Blaine is one of the best equipped public men, or perhaps I should say one of the best public men in all branches of government. I have no hesitancy in saying that Blaine has a right to aspire, and undoubtedly does aspire, to be president. I am sorry if he is ill, but I have no doubt the report is greatly exaggerated."

"Do you think he will be nominated in 1888?"

"You have as good an opportunity to judge as I. The trend of events should give him promise, certainly. I have only the newspapers to judge from, and I have no hesitancy in saying that the newspapers seem to forward his nomination in 1888."

An editorial in the World, the great democratic newspaper, says: "It is encouraging to hear that the president has determined on an extended western trip. It would have been of great advantage to Cleveland and the democratic party if he had got a thousand or two miles distant from Washington, from Massachusetts and from Wall street, for observation of the country and an acquaintance with the people of the country a year ago."

A Timely Hint.

(N. Y. Sun, Ind. Dem.)

If Mr. Cleveland will confine his pen to public documents and leave the "traffic in sectional hate" and "threats of personal violence" to the proper and natural fields of discussion, he will maintain the dignity of his office on a much higher plane than can be done by telling why he refuses to "helplessly subject it to insult."

cures of Scrofulous diseases continually add to the reputation of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. John McDonald, 124 Suffolk st., Lowell, Mass., says: "For a number of years I was a great sufferer from Scrofula, which manifested itself in early childhood. So virulent and offensive were the sores which appeared on my body, that my parents kept me from school most of the time. I became emaciated, pale, languid, and feeble, and my friends said it was Consumption. A physician in New York state recommended treatment with
