From where I sit... by Joe Marsh

How Would You Say It?

Curley Lawson's cousin from back East and a few of us got talking when he was here visiting, and I couldn't help noticing how different he said things.

For instance, he said, "Lifting that 200-pound bag of cement almost killed me." "You mean sack of cement?" asks Curley. (That's the way we'd say it.) "No," interrupts young Elliott who'd spent a lot of time down South. "He means a 'poke of cement.'"

It was good for a chuckle, anyway. Bag, sack or poke—what was he trying to say. It just depends on where you are in the U. S., which way sounds right.

From where I sit, whenever we criticize someone for sounding funny to us, we ought to think how we sound to them. It's the same as choosing your liquid refreshment. I'm sure you'd to a moderate glass of beer, or a nice like ginger ale, but what if you're the other's wrong? I'd say we're both right!
