The Third Rail By LEO C. DEAN

Side Roads and Short Cuts.

Headline in the Portland Oregonian says, "Head for Salem Chest." Now if they can find some legs they'll have another ball player for the Salem Senators ... Met a couple of 12-year-old boys on the street here in Mill City and said I supposed they were happy as it wouldn't be long 'till they could go back to school. After staring in disbelief one told the other: "That old bird ain't got all his marbles." ... Word that has dropped from the American language—"dude" ... Wonder what percentage of boys today would know a whiffle-tree from a single-tree ... Or how to make (not buy) a kite that would fly ... But plenty of them can name the make and model of a plane at sight. And their sisters can swim, which is more than their grandmas could do. So the score is more than evened.

The Branding Chute.

ILLUMINATI—Those having or claiming enlightenment.

Home Helps Department.

Dear Home Helps:

My husband has had his teeth all extracted, and he looks terrible. When we were married I thought he resembled Nat Goodwin, and now he looks like the second of the Witches of Endor, reading from left to right. Honestly, when he's asleep one look at him would give a Pute squaw fainting spells. I know I married him for better or for worse, but he has raised the ante on me. I am a rugged woman, but this is too much. Please help me.—Mrs. A. J. Tated.

Dear Mrs. Tated: Courage, my good woman. You have numerous avenues of escape. Rig up several valid excuses for a six months' visit away from home, or, if that is impossible, cut a couple of holes in a strong muslin sack and make him wear that over his head while he's at home. And steel yourself for future ordeals. He will probably be no bargain when he's reassembled, false teeth and all, and when he says, "Please pass the potatoes," you'll think he's whistling for the dog. Don't worry, maybe you can trade him in on a later model. You're welcome.—Home Helps Editor.

Uncle Henry Henstutter says, "Constable Sag Peters, who fell out of a tree while reconnoiterin' th' nudist picnic, is able to be up and around again."
