Driving to Salem last Monday the Ed Cooke family had a startling experience. Serious damage could have resulted considering the animal was a large buck.

TWO FORCES

Two great forces stand behind the economy of this country.

One is mass production—the unique system of producing goods of every kind of high quality, in volume, and at a low cost. It is the root source of material abundance and high living standards.

The other is mass distribution—the equally important and equally efficient system developed to bring those goods within reach of the 140,000,000 people who use them.

This is a huge nation in land area. Yet the same brands of goods, at about the same prices, are found in every corner of it. They are advertised in our newspapers and magazines, and over the radio. When something new appears, it is put on sale in remote towns almost as soon as it reaches the stores in the biggest cities. Its merits are shown to buyers in basically the same way.

In mass distribution, as in mass production, we see the finished results of the free enterprise and co-operatives of getting a job done. The retail store is the average American's closest and most personal contact with the forces that make the nation's economy tick. It is the place where he spends much of his money — and where the irresistible pressure of competition outside of monopolies guarantees that he will get fair value in exchange.

Mass production turns out the goods—and mass distribution sees to it that they are readily available when we want them.

DEMOLISHING THE ROADS

Overwhelming evidence is piling up to substantiate the belief that heavy commercial trucking is destroying our major highways at an alarming rate, and at a huge cost to private motorists and all other taxpayers.

A particularly convincing example has been cited by the chief highway engineer of Illinois. His department accumulated detailed data on two sections of Illinois highway which are 30 miles apart and identical in construction. One section, according to a traffic count, carried an average of 490 trucks a day while the other carried less than 20. The first section, after 20 years of service, "was practically demolished." The second section was "in perfect shape after 22 years of service."
