

Heart Patient Aids Other Victims

When Kenneth Cloud was stricken with a severe heart attack in 1944, and confined to his apartment at 1200 Lake Shore Drive in Chicago, he was best known as a well-to-do publisher of trade magazines.

During his long confinement in bed, Cloud got restless, and to pass time he learned to knit. During the last year of the war he knit 192 long scarfs, and through Bundles for Bluejackets sent them all over the world.

Today, the same man who took up knitting to soothe his nerves not only continues to be a successful publisher, and an expert with knitting needles, but is the inventor of the Jenny Wren Yarn Winder. Recently a news correspondent asked Cloud about the yarn winder machine. "Oh that," said Cloud, "that's just a little mechanical device retailing for $2.98. It winds a one-ounce skein of yarn into a perfect ball in less than five minutes." He arranged to have the young lady, pictured above, demonstrate the Winder.

"I have organized the Cloud Foundation, with headquarters at 400 West Madison St., Chicago, to manufacture the Winder and make it available to all persons who knit. Profits from sales go through my doctor to the aid of cardiacs in hospitals who are not as fortunately situated as I was when a heart attack hit me" . . . was the modest statement of Mr. Cloud as he brought the interview to a close.

Flat Tires Keyword Of Early Highways

Away back in 1928, almost a quarter of a century ago, automobile tires were not so rugged as now and the highways of the state were not so smooth. Also farm wagons and horses shared the roads and over the miles they and the old Model T sprinkled hardware, nails and screws, bolts and staples, and other puncture producing junk along the right of way. In those rough days if an auto tire stuck it out for more than 3,000 miles it was rated almost as a museum piece. Punctures and blow-outs were the rule, not the exception, of the day and every wise guy who went very far away from the home plate carried an extra inner tube or a patching and vulcanizing set under the driver's seat.

Roy Klein, who was state highway engineer in 1928 was a kindly and sympathetic man whose heart was hurt by the sight of so many puncture patchers sweating over their tire tools along the scenic reaches of the highway map. They sort of cluttered up the landscape, so he did something about it.

It appears that a young professor in engineering at Washington State college at Pullman devised and constructed an electro-magnet attached to the under side of a small truck, and Roy Klein had a similar machine built for Oregon.

It is probable that very many more of today's crop of graying motorists still harbor harrowing memories of the punctures of the early 20's than visual recollections of Roy Klein's remedy, called the "nail picker." It isn't stowed away in some cozy corner of the state highway's shops but is used every year on many miles of road, and has saved many from that depressing sound, the hissing tire.

What was it? Let the record speak. It says the 1928 report: "A new piece of equipment which has been placed in operation this year is a road magnet mounted on a truck. In six months time this truck traversed practically all of the state highway routes and picked up many thousands of pounds of metal, a large proportion of which would be productive of tire punctures." And in the 1930 report: "The use of the road magnet, begun in 1928, has been continued during the two-year period. Thousands of pounds of metal, much of which would be injurious to tires, are picked up each year."

Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Berg of Glendale, Calif., are visiting at the home of their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Tommie Craig. They are here to attend graduation exercises for their grandson, Martin who will graduate from Newberg high June 1. Miss Juanita Thomas will leave Saturday for Kansas and will be gone a month. She will visit friends and relatives there and will return to Burns, Oregon, on her return.
