Citizens Reminded of Forest Wealth

The Willamette National Forest, in which Detroit and the dam are located, is one of 152 such Federally owned forests in the United States. It covers an area of 1,660,000 acres and contains a total timber stand of 27 billion board feet, which is greater than that of any other National Forest in the United States.

The Willamette National Forest is managed under the multiple use concept. That is: all of its resources are so handled that none of them monopolize the forest to the exclusion of others. These resources are watershed, timber, grazing, wildlife and recreation.

As timber is put up in units, advertised, and sold to the highest bidder. Only mature and over-mature timber is sold, and its harvesting is so regulated as to protect the other resources and to insure prompt reforestation of the area. In 1949, on this forest, 226 million board feet of timber was cut, which brought in revenue $2,800,000. Twentyfive per cent of this income is paid to the local counties to be used for roads and schools.

All the resources of the national forests are subject to destruction if the forest burns. It is the responsibility of all who live in and use the forest to see that they individually use fire with care. Rules of fire prevention are simple but important.

1. Never throw cigarettes or matches out of the car. Use the ash tray.
 2. On narrow forest roads and trails stop in a safe place when you want a smoke.

3. Never leave your campfire burning. Leave a clean camp and a dead fire.

4. The forest is no place for firecrackers.

5. Get campfire and burning permits at the Detroit Ranger station. Burning permits are required after May 15, campfire permits after July 1.

The Forest Service endeavors to so manage the National Forests that they may be of the greatest good to the greatest number of people in the long run.

Laughter has no religion. There should be more of it in the world.—Pope Pius XII.
