HAVE A BETTER KITCHEN

Garbage is making news! Some of this news comes from the small city of Jasper, Ind., where every home is being fitted with an electric garbage disposer. Soon it will be illegal there to dispose of kitchen garbage in any other way.

This action marks the first time that the automatic disposer has been employed on a community wide basis, but thousands of homemakers all over the country will testify that there is no easier, simpler or more satisfactory way of getting rid of the inconvenient, dirty, and disease breeding garbage can.

Fit Any Sink

While the electric garbage disposer is more closely associated with the modern cabinet sink and the electric sink, most units on the market will fit any kitchen sink. They chew up all sorts of kitchen wastes and swirl the pulverized particles into the sewer system in a flood of cold water. Like any other mechanical appliance, the disposer should be used only for what it is intended; the disposer is for organic kitchen wastes, not for tin cans, paper or other rubbish.

With this device, the homemaker can keep her kitchen free of wastes as she prepares meals, bakes, does the canning, and cleans up after meals. Just scrape the garbage into the disposer opening, turn on the cold water, flip the switch and the grinding rotors do the rest. A feature of one disposer on the market is the reversing action of the rotors; each time the switch is turned on the grinding mechanism moves in the opposite direction, serving to keep the unit extra clean.
