People in America and England are not Anglo-Saxons; neither are there any Anglo-Saxon people or institutions on earth, according to S. D. O'Connell, of the Bureau of Statistics, Washington, D. C. The dominating influences of our civilization are not from any one or two sources, but from many races of the earth; and those who are best able to choose say that the predominant strain is the Celtic. The Anglo-Saxon strain in our blood is very slight compared with all the other blood infused with it.
