Glorifying "Hand-Me-Downs"

Any family with growing youngsters can duplicate this scene showing little sister happy as a lark with her "new" dress, while big sister exults as she recognizes her outgrown tog and mother beams satisfaction over her success.

A box of all-fabric dye (available in 50 colors at drug, department and dime stores) did the trick. You can make any "hand-me-down" palatable by tinting it a new color—and even big sister wouldn't recognize it if you alter a little by adding a belt, collar or hem, or by changing the trimmings.

Before dyeing, suggests the Tintex Home Economics Bureau, remove belts, buttons and trimmings, and rip out hems, pleats and linings. This will permit even penetration of dye. And if garment is stained, spotted or unevenly faded, use color remover first, counsels the bureau.
