'Hobbies of My Neighbors'

By MRS. RUTH JOHNSON

I have two neighbor women whose hobby is fishing and more fishing. They are up at the first ray of dawn and down along the river bank at sunrise almost every day through fishing season in sunshine or rain.

A week or two before the season opens you can take one look at their happy faces and know they are happy about everything. It is both joy and adventure to them. They get their poles out and see to that they are in ship-shape.

You can see them out hunting worms and buying flies. They are good fishermen too, as a rule they are very lucky and get their limit. If they do not that does not dampen their spirits any, for they are out again the next day at the crack of dawn and at it again. That is what I call good sportsmanship.

I have seen them go out early in the morning taking only a sandwich apiece for lunch. They tramp over fallen logs, fall down on rocks, and get all skinned up, walk mile and mile and get only two or three small ones. Did that discourage them? No! They are all smiles and very jolly about the whole affair.

Besides being good fishermen, they are darn good neighbors, none better. I have known both women since I arrived in town on Aug. 29th, 1946, from Billings, Mont. They are always willing to lend a helping hand to anyone in need and just to volunteer their aid to any good and just cause.

These neighbors I speak of are Mrs. Myrtle Gestson and Mrs. Esther Fouts —let their faces be forever happy and their laughter always light.

Now I was never lucky as a fisherman, all I ever caught was a sucker, the last one I caught keeps dangling on my line. He can't get away, he got it hook, line and sinker. But he seems to be satisfied with my "line".

There's Gold In Your Farm Woodlot

No. 2 (Second of a series of six articles on second-growth forests as a cash crop, prepared by private, state and federal forest agencies)

Remember this: Trees grow! Every year they grow they make money for you. You don't pull up the carrot patch when it is half grown and expect to make any money. You do thin the carrot patch and get bigger carrots and more cash.

Let's talk about your woodlot for just a minute and discuss some of the types and kinds of trees growing there before we talk about managing your trees.

If you have a typical farm woodlot found throughout Washington and Oregon west of the Cascades here's what you'll find: (a) some young seedlings and saplings, (b) some poles about 35 years old, and (c) some saw log trees.

Seedlings and saplings: Here is a young forest which has seeded in from close by seed trees. Fire has been kept out. There will be about 2500 trees to an acre, 10 to 12 feet tall and 2 inches in diameter. What good is this "brush" you may ask? A sapling stand will yield Christmas trees, posts and fuel. You may even find some old cedar wind-falls or big trees left by early loggers. These are worth money today.

Your poles will be about 35 years old and there will be about 350 trees to an acre. They will range from 6 to 16 inches in diameter and the trees will be 70 to 90 feet tall. These trees will produce fence posts, fuel, pulpwood, occasional poles and piling and small saw logs.

Some of your woodlot will have saw log trees. These trees will be about 80 years old, will range from 6 to 30 inches in diameter and will average from 110-150 feet tall. There may be anywhere from 50 to 100 on each acre. The larger trees will be Douglas fir, the shorter ones hemlock and cedar which will grow in the shade of the larger trees.

These forests contain many valuable products, and generally experienced foresters should be consulted to get best possible return as well as to develop a good harvesting plan. Larger trees will make good saw logs. Best logs will bring premium as peeler. In addition you can take off crops of poles, piling, fuel, pulpwood, posts each year and still leave a good, growing stand. Next we'll talk about how to keep the goose-trees that lay the golden eggs.

(For more particulars write your State Forester at Olympia, Washington or Salem, Oregon for your free copy of "YOUR TREES—A CROP," how to grow and harvest them in the Douglas fir region.)
