The DEBUNKER

By John Harvey Farbay, Ph.D.

GORILLAS ARE NOT FEROCIOUS

The gorilla has long been described by explorers as a deadly beast, always beating its breast, roaring and killing men who dared to come near. Carl Akeley, in his book, "In Brightest Africa," says these animals are really indifferent to the presence of man, and are sometimes inquisitive enough to come quite close. He says accounts of the ferocity of gorillas have been written from imagination, in order to provide the necessary element of "danger" to explorations.

So this is HOUSEKEEPING

Through some quirk of reasoning, most veterans at the art of homemaking unconsciously consider brides as idiotic little butterflies who have emerged mysteriously from some cocoon without a practical thought in their heads.

When I discovered that my next-door neighbor seriously thought I didn't know a darned needle from an egg souffle I determined to strike a blow for bridehood with a practical idea that would bowl her over. My big chance finally came when she complained that her youngest daughter flatly and resentfully refused to wear any more hand-me-down clothes that everyone had seen on her sister years before. I charged in with the simplest of all solutions: dye a new wardrobe!

Seeing the gleam in Janet's eye I went into high gear and pointed out that with an all-fabric dye which works on every fabric she could transform coats, dresses, blouses, skirts, slacks, and everything dear to a girl's heart. Janet had a barrage of questions. Luckily, I had carefully read a booklet from the Tintex Home Economics Bureau and was all set with the answers. Colors? Fifty fashion-new shades from which to choose. When to use color remover before re-dyeing? When fabric is unevenly faded, spotted, or stained; when changing from a dark to a lighter color; when an entirely new or different color is desired.

By that time Janet had the "dye bug" and came up with her own idea which I'll file away for future reference . . . just in case. She thought of tintexing old sheets to make into colorful, inexpensive costumes for school plays or for all the masquerade parties that crop up from Halloween to New Year's!

I've noticed two things since my big confab with Janet. After a flurry of home-dyeing, her girls and her young son have pridefully blossomed forth with seemingly new, fresh, and colorful outfits. I have been elevated to a new status in her mind somewhere in the region of "You might turn out to be a homemaker one of these days at that!"

Fouts, Charlotte Mapes, Myrtle Geston, Molly Faulhaber, and Bernadine Stoll.

Poppy posters were judged, $1.00 awards to each class. Class 2 won by Lanny Vickers, class 1 by Cora Lee Whitten. The next meeting will be held at the home of Thelma Storey.
