OUT OF GODFREY'S TEABAG

You know, the Russians are always taking credit for all our modern inventions. Now they say they drilled the first oil well. I wouldn't know—but I will give them credit for natural gas.

We've had steady rain for five days. Here in New York it is wetter than an Irishman's moustache on St. Patrick's Day.

The Weather Bureau, instead of putting out a forecast, just put on a record: "The Little Cloud that Cried."

There's something about this Spring weather. I feel a familiar stirring within me and it means only one thing—heartburn!

The repairs are finally finished on the White House, and they haven't decided yet whether or not to let the public in—and the public has yet to decide whom they'll let in next year.
