LITTLE ILLS
MAKE BIG BILLS!

• True, that "little illness" you've been mentioning in an offhand way, may not seem to amount to much—just a few faint symptoms. But, neglected, these "little ills" can lead to big bills for doctors, medicines, etc; not to mention needless suffering and loss of precious time. Consult a Doctor now—you'll save by it in the end. And, of course, we hope you'll bring his prescription to us for careful compounding.

Out of the Woods

By JAMES STEVENS

Stump Story . . .

The woods are full of stories about stump ranchers and the tricks they have tried to make the clearing of cutover Douglas fir land an easy proposition. The best stump story yet, to my notion, is one I've just read in the new novel, "Winds of the Morning," by H. L. Davis, one-time deputy sheriff and deputy assessor of Wasco county.

The story starts: "Going down across the road to camp, I thought of a huge old fir stump that a family of new homesteaders had tried to burn out of their hayfield once, in the mountains back of Thief Creek. They prepared for it by boring auger holes in the top of the stump and filling them with turpentine. They plugged them and allowed a year for the turpentine to soak in well, and then they piled brush over the stump and set it afire. . . ."

The Big Clearing . . .

The history of life and progress on the land of the U. S. A. could well be written around its stumps. The logging in the wilderness, from Jamestown west. Then the grubbing, by all the wonderful ways and means, from Adam's spade to the modern bull-dozer, that human brains could think up to save human backache. The burning and blasting, and now, if I know my stump ranchers, they are dreaming of the final fixing of their problem by power of the atomic bomb.

The Davis stump story in "Winds of the Morning"—which, by the way, kept me holed up in the boompond shack for a couple of days, while the old 1909 model Olives Visible Type-writer stood idle—really represents the work of the Big Clearing all the way across. Each stump was a hard job. Even grubbing out sagebrush was no boy's chore, and I speak as one who did a pile of it as a boy. But it was the big fir stump that called up the Paul Bunyan in a man, and the Thomas Alva Edison too.

Davis tells how the Thief Creek Stump was set afire finally, with the coals eating slowly down to the tip ends of the roots.

It was still burning after eight months and amazing all hands at the spread of the roots afar from the stump itself. It got so that riders feared to risk their horses anywhere on the ranch . . . "for fear of breaking through into one of the burned-out tunnels where a root had been, and places in the hayfield and under the house were still cracking open and emitting stridles of smoke even after there was a foot of snow on the ground . . ."

Prime Winter Reading . . .

Our story-teller goes on to observe that, "A man's thoughts could spread a hundred times farther than a tree's root system could, and take more than a hundred times longer to burn out. There was no kind of turpentine that could penetrate down into them to make it easier. It took time, and there was no way to tell whether they were all out or not. It was better not to have too many of them, maybe. Some people managed fairly well without any."

There's a prime parable for you. I wish I had time to quote from Page 313 a description of the fir forest and an old burn coming out of winter. The entire novel goes deep into the Columbia River Country and all its figures of earth. The story gets a grip on you right off the bat that keeps you reading hard, and reading back regularly to make sure you are not losing track on a solitary item.

Probably I'd not be so reckless in cheering for "Winds of the Morning" if such experts as Nard Jones and Oscar Lewis hadn't cut loose first with lavish praise for it. Don't miss this ramrod of all the western stories.
