The Sweetheart of the Corn

Since 1911 the Sweetheart of the Corn has been as famous to the American public as the face of famous motion picture personalities, presidents and international dignitaries. For a few years however, she has been missing now and then from the American scene but again on millions of boxes of Kellogg's Corn Flakes she returns dressed in a red and white checked gingham dress with sunbonnet to match and holding several ears of corn. The original Sweetheart of the Corn was Fanny Bryant who was a stenographer at the Kellogg Company office in 1911. The present Sweetheart is a typical American girl in her late teens with reddish blonde hair.

WEEK'S NEWS

WEARY—While waiting for transportation to take him to a rear area this battle-weary GI, veteran of the fighting on Triangle Hill, Korea, decided to catch up on his correspondence. But weariness from week-long fighting overtook him and he fell asleep.

HEROIC ROLE—Father Chas. V. Lucier, prison chaplain shown leaving Columbus, Ohio, Penitentiary after pleading with rioting convicts to return to their cells as they broke out in wild disorder.

F. S. WILSON, vice president of the Osborne Company, Clifton, New Jersey, and Gerald Reynolds, vice president of the Future Farmers of America, inspect a painting honoring the vocational agricultural teacher used for the Future Farmers of America 1953 calendar published by Osborne. 300,000 calendars will be distributed to farm families by public spirited businessmen.

ROY ROGERS and Dale Evans are among the many prominent Americans sponsoring Worldwide Bible Reading, annual project of the American Bible Society. From Thanksgiving to Christmas, the people of 40 countries will jointly read the Scriptures to help unite nations in peace and brotherhood.

NEW FOR THE OFFICE—Lovely Geraldine Palmer demonstrates the new Selmix 1200 office unit which will replace the old type water cooler. The unit dispenses drinks at a very low cost to the employer and saves many manhours. It is manufactured by Selmix Dispensers Inc., Long Island City, N. Y.

Out of the Woods

By JAMES STEVENS

The Loggers' Own . . .

What's that you say? "Who is Olive Barber?"

Friend, you must be fresh in the Northwest, mighty new to the woods. Take a gander around my boompond shack here and you'll see newspaper columns with her name at the top stuck up and peeking out almost anywhere. More are somewhere up there on the main shelf. There you are, in the big envelope between the bottle of Old Pawnbroker and the Copenhagen dispenser.

Best of all, here's her new book, "The Lady and the Lumberjack". The newspaper columns that Olive Barber used to write show where she has lived and what she has observed in timber towns from Alaska to Coos Bay, while the book, just out in the stores, tells her own colorful and exciting life story in those places, and tells Curly's with her own.

Curly is the logger of the book. He is one of the kind you meet with the conviction that here is a man who was born to log and do nothing but log, to do it forever, an indestructible, unstoppable man.

Olive's man . . . Frank (Curly) Barber.

Logger's Wife . . .

If you are of the woods, or if you have been around the woods at all, you will admire what Olive Barber has to say of loggers' wives. They have an especial champion in Olive. She defends them against all comers, human or inhuman.

"Loggers' wives," says she, "For one thing, have more dignity than most women. They always wear dresses when out in public. You seldom or never see them in slacks or Levis. Not that these breeches are in any way wrong. But loggers are strong for femininity. Their ladies strive to please." Olive was a school teacher in Washington state 30 years ago when she married Curly. While the "I dos" were still echoing she found herself on the way to the Coos Bay wilderness and to a honeymoon in a tent. It was ten years before she and Curly bought a hillside farm home. South of Coos Bay, it could be reached only by boat on a slough.

Life was hard work, tough and lonely going.

The lady began to write. At first it was of birds. Olive had become a bird-watcher by hobby and found bird study to be of absorbing interest in her wilderness life. A Coos Bay editor, Wendell Webb, now managing editor of the Salem Statesman, was—and is—the soul of friendliness. He began to publish Olive Barber's little columns about birds in the Coos Bay Times.

The column grew, from 50 to 300 words, from birds to a variety of subjects of the world and the people about her.

Success at Sixty . . .

Olive Barber is of the young in heart. So is Curly, now a boss logger at Yakutat, Alaska, where the two spend their summers on the edge of a glacier. She is down here to see her book through publication.

Well, friend, right there she sat on the hewn log bench with its gunnysack cushion, and admitted that writing a line on the 1909 Model Three Bank Oliver Visible Typewriter was one of the few things she'd ever been afraid to tackle.

"Some day it will fall apart, like the One Hoss Shay, and all from just a single poke at a key," she said. "I won't risk the poke."

Olive Barber has a kind and complimentary tongue. "You look like a Methodist," she said to me. Friend, it has warmed my heart ever since to think I really might look that good. Olive Barber is a wonder. Read that book!
