

Red Cross Fund Campaign Poster for 1953

The "marching flags" poster of the late N. C. Wyeth, first used by the Red Cross in 1933 and repeated in 1947, will be used again as the poster of the 1953 Fund Campaign because of its great popularity. Repeated also is last year's slogan, "Answer the Call."

Popular belief has it that young men are naturally quicker in all their reactions than older men, but tests with electric timing devices have shown that, in England, middle-aged men are quickest of all. When a white light was flashed, the men were to pull the trigger and fire the gun. The average time required after seeing the light was, for young men under 20, 0.25 seconds; while for men from 45 to 50 years of age it was only 0.21 seconds.
