Ten-year-old Linda Retherford of Burns, Ore., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Retherford, receives a table treatment for muscle training and relaxation from Mrs. Jeannine Gimbel, physical therapist, at the Easter Seal agency's hospital school for crippled children in Eugene. Improved Library-- fee, this being the approximate cost per borrower living in the city.

A county library is a book and information center for ALL the people of a county and supported by a county tax, and thereby its services would be available without further charge to all county residents.

In Linn county where small libraries already exist, as in Lebanon, Sweet Home, Brownsville, Halsey and Harrisburg, a county library would provide additional books, both in large collections for long loan and as needed to meet special requests. For the some 32,000 residents of Linn county living outside places with libraries, books would be taken by bookmobile to communities and to schools, with supplementary mail and phone service also available.

Since by Oregon law the county library headquarters must be located in the county seat, for Linn county it would be located in Albany. The board of the Albany public library has offered the use of its building, so there would be no present expense for county library quarters. Another saving would be effected by use of Albany's reference collection and other books and equipment which would not need to be duplicated. It is estimated that a tax of less than a mill per year would provide funds for county library service.

At the county-wide meeting on the evening of March 31 more details about library services, how to go about making such services available, the importance of books to school children and to adults even in an age of movies, radio and television, and other questions will be considered.

The committee will welcome questions before and after the meeting, as the purpose is educational. Anyone wanting to submit questions beforehand or desiring more information about the meeting may write or call Mrs. Ohling, as before mentioned, or Mrs. Floyd Edwards, Route 4, Box 151, Albany, telephone 2276L.

For those unfamiliar with the location of the Linn County 4-H Club fairgrounds, it is just east of Albany, near Waverly lake, and is reached by the road which goes by the airport from 99E to the Santiam highway.
