of walnut, he said. Had another project all finished and at home. A round coffee table. His pride and joy, one inferred.

Bill Shepherd had a lot of well-sanded sticks lying about. What was it? A dining table and a pair of chairs. Well, at least he's ambitious! Lyle Fleetwood was flitting about from saw to jointer to sander to bench and back again, busy building some kind of smoker's stand. A gadget to hold the SMOKE trails he left when making end runs, he says. O, mahogany plywood—I recognized it myself, this time. And Sy Syverson was working on something the like of which has never been seen. A lamp, he called it. And Dick Kanoff—boy, is he versatile; a butcher knife, he says his pa cut a finger demonstrating its keen edge to a friend, a hunting knife, a book case that is a honey, and I don't know what all.

This is the Junior-Senior shop class. A visit to the Freshman-Sophomore class to see if what they are making compares with these projects is called for. Next week perhaps.

Honestly, you should see the things. And the fellows say you may, for they are planning an exhibit May 7 at the "Mother's Tea" and then an extra special showing for the townspeople on Saturday, May 9 in the old Mill City Furniture store. Keep that date in mind that you may come and help select the projects to be taken to the Industrial Arts contest in Salem on May 21, 22 and 23 in competition with many of the valley schools.
