Mill City's Own

Mill City school band will be bright and shining in their spic-and-span new uniforms for the big dedication ceremonies at Detroit dam, June 10. A few years ago there was no school band in Mill City. That was before the time of Earl Loucks.

Bandmaster Loucks came on the scene in Mill City's school system in 1949, and soon thereafter there began a quiet campaign for a band. Loucks is a fine hand with the youngsters and focused Mill City's attention on the good in having a band represent it.

In its modest beginnings it was not quite possible that band members be uniformed in the style befitting a worth while band. Funds for the band did not allow such a thing. School funds were not available for this untried and new organization. But under the constant and careful direction of Loucks the band during its three years took part, performed and competed in a fine manner with other bands in the valley.

Now Mill City has a band that deserves the best of uniforms. These uniforms have been ordered. The community is seeking ways and means whereby it can pay for these uniforms. The coming band concert, May 21, is just one such means.

Detroit dam dedication will be televised. Our band is slated for a spot on that program as one of the performing bands. Mill City will be there with a uniformed band, which will play in a grand style, rest assured.

NOW, WHO'S GOING TO REPRESENT THE REST OF US?

It remained for Secretary of the Interior Douglas McKay to come up with a remark last week which may rank along with that of Defense Secretary Charles Wilson's "whats-good-for-General-Motors-is-good-for-the-country."

Speaking to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, McKay said: "We're in the saddle as an administration representing business and industry."

In the saddle? Yes, no question about that. "Representing business and industry," the man said. Not just "serving business," or "sympathetic to business" but actually, "representing business."

It is our recollection that the administration was elected by votes from all segments of the economy—workers, consumers—and business. The admission from a top administration spokesman that only one of these segments—business—will be represented is startling, dismaying and cause for considerable concern.

The American people wanted a business administration. But they haven't asked the administration to give them the business. — From Oregon Teamster.

EISENHOWER'S "CRUSADERS"

Here are some typical appointments made by the Eisenhower administration in vital just-below-Cabinet-level spots:

ALBERT M. COLE, Housing and Home Finance administrator: a bitter foe of public housing is put in charge of the government's housing program. JOSEPH E. TALBOTT, member of the Tariff commission: a high-tariff advocate of the McKinley variety, who feels that the President has too much to say about tariff and trade policy. EDWARD F. HOWREY, member of the Federal Trade commission: an able lawyer who has represented big business before the commission for years.

ANCHER NELSON, head of the Rural Electrification administration: a Minnesota politician who helped draft the farm plank at the last Republican convention and showed strong hostility to loans for power generating plants and transmission lines. JOHN H. DAVIS, director of Commodity Marketing and Adjustment, Department of Agriculture: an officer from the National Wool Marketing Corporation takes charge of the department's price-support operations, bringing with him a belief that a large part of the job could be handled better by private industry.

DON PAARLBERG, Economic Adviser to the Secretary of Agriculture: a confirmed opponent of farm price supports.

FRED G. AANDAHL, Assistant Secretary of the Interior in charge of water and power: a strong supporter of the states'-right philosophy, favoring a maximum of local ownership and control of public power projects.

FELIX WORMSER, Assistant Secretary of the Interior in charge of mineral resources: another outspoken high-tariff man—as far as lead and zinc are concerned.

ROBERT W. S. McLEOD, top security officer, State Department: the former administrative assistant to Senator Bridges and good friend of Senator McCarthy gets a key post with Secretary Dulles.

The personnel turnover has extended into what are normally considered civil-service career jobs. Thus Secretary of Commerce Weeks has tried to get rid of the Director of the Bureau of Standards—and may yet succeed; Secretary of Interior McKay has recommended the dismissal of the directors of the Bureau of Mines, the Fish and Wildlife Service, and the Bureau of Land Management. The proposed change in the Bureau of Mines has aroused the ire of the formidable John L. Lewis. — From The Nation.

HARDLY 'INSIGNIFICANT'

President Eisenhower is asking congress to take another look at the McCarran - Walker immigration act, passed last year. And a good idea it is. This law, which lumped together a whole batch of existing immigration laws and added a few twists of its own, has stirred up more enmity toward the United States in friendly countries than anything in a decade. It requires, for instance, that well-behaved ladies seeking to enter this country must be asked by an immigration inspector whether or not they have been prostitutes. It seeks to bar persons with even the slightest connection in years past with Communism, but it leaves the door wide open to Fascists and Nazis. But Sen. Pat McCarran of Nevada, one of the authors of the bill, brushes off the objections cited by the president as "insignificant." (Continued on Page 4)
