Yours truly is sporting something for New Year's. A "black eye." Beware all you New Year's Eve goers or you, too, may sport something besides a new outfit for the New Year.

Mr. and Mrs. Leo Morgan and Mr. and Mrs. John Savage were California visitors the past week.

Since the days of the Pilgrim Fathers, the turkey has been the traditional festive dinner for holidays and very special occasions. In those early days it was a game bird and was most likely tough and wiry, as wild birds usually are. The turkey is no longer a rare luxury.

How this amazing transition came about is a fascinating story. It is a story of science and industry working hand in hand with the farmer—as they have in so many ways on the farm — each contributing to the work of the other to the ultimate benefit of all.

The first advance was in the field of genetics, the science of breeding. Then came the endless and patient work by the turkey-breeder to select strains of birds with a broad breast and well formed thigh, etc. The field of nutrition where science and the farmer now have about 30 different nutrients that go into a turkey's diet. Growers have to be constantly alert to watch for disease, for, as you know, nature takes care of this factor in a wild state by keeping her animals separated, or in small units. But on a farm, if disease gets into a flock, it might kill half the flock. For years this has been the farmer's hazard. Today, however, science has come to the rescue and found many drugs, vaccines and chemicals which can hold these fever-present diseases at bay. One of these is the "wonder drug" Aureomycin, which, when fed to the birds in feed or water, can prevent the invasion of a large number of disease germs. The turkeys then grow better and faster and more economically and go to the nation's tables at a price everyone can afford to pay.
